PREFACE.

From the first publication of Allibone's Dictionary its value has been recognized and the use of it in public and private libraries has constantly extended and increased. Covering as it does the whole field of English literature, and combining biographical, bibliographical, and critical material, it is, in fact, a unique work,—indispensable as a library companion, serviceable to all students of subjects comprehended in its range, and not without interest for readers of every class who may be led by some casual desire for information to consult its pages. Produced by a vast amount of careful and diligent labor, it supplies a general and permanent need, and it has, consequently, had no rival and run no risk of being supplanted,—unlike in this respect a host of dictionaries and other works of reference having a different scope and containing information that has become obsolete through the advance of knowledge or changes of usage and after serving its purpose for a time has been made the basis of wider and more minute research.

It belongs, however, to the very nature of such a work that it should require to be supplemented from time to time. Its substance does not decay; the information which it gives is not superseded by the results of further inquiry; but the matter with which it deals is constantly increasing in bulk, and the accretions call for an extension of space and a fresh amount of labor in order that they may be arranged and stowed in an annex of suitable dimensions. How rapid has been the rate of literary production in recent years—rivalling the accelerated speed of travel and the multiplication of mechanical inventions—will be apparent on the merest glance through these volumes. Covering a comparatively short period, they contain more than half as many pages as the original work, and this although the matter is in many respects given in a more concise form, everything being pruned away which in a strict view of the requirements of the task might be considered superfluous.

A closer comparison of the two works will show still more plainly the enormous progressive activity of modern authorship and the need of condensation in all non-essential particulars in a record like the present. The original work, according to the statement on the title-page, contains the names and enumerates the works of "over forty-six thousand" authors. The present work, confined to a period not exceeding an average of thirty years, contains the names of thirty-seven thousand one hundred and eighty-three authors, or more than four-fifths as many as belong to all the previous centuries and decades which witnessed not only the rise and development but the most brilliant epochs, successive schools, and varied forms of English literature, including at least the earliest works of most of the writers that have shed a waning lustre on the literature of the nineteenth century. For it will hardly be questioned that we now stand not in the noontide but near the close of a day marked by achievements which have a distinct and original character in substance and form, with many new types, a fresh infusion of life, and perhaps a more complete union of genius with culture, of imaginative power with the comprehension of realities, than distinguished any earlier development. Very few of the names registered in this Supplement without any reference to a mention of them in the original work are among the most eminent in the departments to which they respectively belong. Still smaller, of course, is the number of living writers who hold such a position. The chronicler whose duty it has been to register the deaths that have thinned the front ranks of the cohort, leaving gaps which might not be filled from the denser throng behind, could not but have an ominous apprehension that the end of his task would indicate no mere arbitrary stopping-place, but would rather be found hereafter to coincide with the termination of an era some of whose latest glories had been watched by the older among us in their dawn. Nor can it be said that the conditions and prevailing spirit of the time give any forecast of a new period of original and vigorous production. No one would undertake to formulate the precise influences under which literary genius is awakened and fostered; but the inspiration and impulse must have an innate origin, and cannot spring from mere extraneous inducements or be stimulated by the march of material progress. Perhaps it may be safe to say that there are periods when the highest intellect is chiefly concerned with the improvement of man's nature, and others when it is chiefly concerned with the improvement of his condition. Literature and art emanate from the former tendency, science and its varied applications from the latter. But no doubt each of these tendencies reacts upon the other, thus bringing about a due alternation.

It must also be acknowledged that, while the literature of the present day is more remarkable for its quantity than for its quality, yet the general level in this latter respect has been steadily rising. In purely imaginative productions skilful construction, artistic finish, adherence to nature, all the results and evidences of culture, are far more common than they were in the eighteenth century or in the earlier part of the nineteenth. In works designed to convey instruction and information the improvement is perhaps still greater and more general. History and biography have ceased to be pompous and ponderous; science seeks to captivate not only by the marvel of its revelations but also by the form in which they are presented; books of travel outrival works of fiction in the narration of exciting adventure, while ministering to the general curiosity and desire for knowledge; and philosophers and essayists address a greater mass of readers and are at the same time tried by more exacting standards than of yore. In short, literature, like the social system, but to a far greater extent, has lost the old class distinctions and become democratic. The scholar no longer writes solely for scholars; the dilettante who appealed only to a fastidious or artificial taste is well-nigh extinct. The erudite few do not wait to have their discoveries or speculations filtered through minor channels before being spread abroad, but communicate directly with a larger public. One obvious result of these changes has been the rise of a number of periodicals far exceeding in variety of topics and general ability of treatment any earlier publications of the kind; but a considerable proportion of what is first given to the world through this medium is soon reproduced in a more convenient and permanent form.

It follows from all this that the literature of the present is more broadly and completely representative than any other, showing "the very age and body of the time his form and pressure." Every phase of actual life is delineated, every fact and incident chronicled, every spring and movement analyzed. Practical pursuits and undertakings are described and explained by those who are personally engaged in them. Not a theory or notion is conceived without claiming public attention. The multitude of books, mostly, of course, ephemeral, that issue year after year in greater numbers from the press testifies to the communicative spirit of the age, to a desire for publicity and self-revelation, distinct from aspirations for fame or distinction. Considered from this point of view, a catalogue partakes of the nature of history, and the titles of books may sometimes prove as instructive and interesting as the contents. In the lists given in these volumes—prepared on a similar principle to that on which the Dominican father recommended the slaughter of all the inhabitants of the captured heretical city—will be found autobiographies of persons of every station, from the monarch to the wandering beggar; dissertations advocating the most opposite opinions and remote forms of thought, from the newest hypotheses of science, or daring flights beyond the usually recognized limits of credibility and proof, to revivals of long-buried superstitions and exploded fallacies; and imaginative productions of every grade of intellect, from the highest genius to a state not readily distinguishable from imbecility. The "Republic of Letters" has become in the fullest sense worthy of its name, with an equality of citizenship, a community of rights, and a mingling and jostling of its component members to which no political system offers a parallel.

The title of the original work indicates the period covered by it as extending to "the latter half of the nineteenth century." The earlier and later portions of it, however, were taken up and completed at long intervals, and the entries were not brought down to a common date under all the letters of the alphabet. The author's first intention seems to have been to end the work at the year 1850, and from A to O inclusive the entries, barring accidental omissions, were completed to that date. But before publication many additional insertions, extending in some instances to 1858, were made under those letters, without any attempt to comprise the full lists of the intervening years. The remainder of the work covers a much more extended period, with a more uniform limit, the entries from P to Z embracing complete lists to the end of 1869, with additions almost equally full to about the middle of 1870. Hence the period covered by this Supplement is also a variable one. Under the letters A to O it begins with the year 1850,—without, of course, repeating the entries of a later date in the original work,—and under the remaining letters it begins with the year 1870. The whole extends to the end of 1888, with a very few entries of later date, mostly to include a completed series of volumes or related works or the last productions of a recently deceased writer. It would have been easy to insert many additional titles, as was done in the original work; but no complete lists to a later date could have been prepared without delaying the press; and the compiler did not desire to leave a straggling line of projections instead of a fixed boundary, and thus impose upon some future successor what has been one of the embarrassing complications of the present task, the necessity, namely, of referring at every step to the entries in an earlier work and connecting his own with them by a process of dovetailing. In the course of this labor many entries of earlier dates than those mentioned, which had been omitted by Allibone, have been supplied in the Supplement, but not systematically, and only, of course, in the case of authors whose publications extended to those dates,—i.e., 1850 under A to O, and 1870 under P to Z. The general plan and method of the original work have been followed in the Supplement, with slight modifications. The bibliographical details have been more uniformly and distinctly separated from the biographical matter; no references have been introduced in the list of an author's works to others on the same subject or of a kindred nature by different writers, and it has not been thought necessary to inform the reader where critical articles from which no quotations are given may be found, any former need of this kind being now supplied by Poole's "Index to Periodical Literature."

Of the authors whose names are entered in this work, some biographical information beyond the mere mention of official or professional positions—such as might presumably be found on a title-page or in a publisher's advertisement—is given in the case of nine thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine. In general the details are very few, and are stated in the baldest form. Longer notices, besides occupying too much space, would often merely have presented the same facts in an expanded form, with the addition of critical estimates which, in cases where they would be likely to be sought for, are here appended in the form of extracts. The sources from which this information has been gathered are too numerous, and generally too well known as affording the most necessary material for the purpose, to be enumerated in full. The most authoritative and the most copious in details, though embracing comparatively few of the names included in the present work, is the "Dictionary of National Biography," now in course of publication, of which the first twenty-five volumes have been used, the last two or three having been received only in time to furnish some corrections in the press. Among works including brief biographies of many notable English writers, living or recent, "Men of the Time," in several editions, Saunders's "Celebrities of the Centuries," and "Women of the Day," by Frances Hays, have been constantly in hand. For cis-Atlantic authors "Appletons' Cyclopædia of American Biography" is the chief authority, as well for the number comprised in it as for its amplitude of details. Among works of a more general scope Thomas's "Dictionary of Biography" demands especial mention, while many minor publications of a similar character have each supplied some required dates or other particulars. Several works, chiefly English, devoted to local, professional, or other special subjects, have proved extremely valuable, the most important being Foster's "Men at the Bar" and "Alumni Oxonienses," the "Bibliotheca Cornubiensis" of Boase and Courtney, the "Encyclopædia of Living Divines" of Schaff and Jackson, and Crockford's "Clerical Directory," with Peerages, Medical Directories, Army Lists, and similar publications, and obituaries in the "Annual Register" and in literary journals. A good many facts have been incidentally collected in the course of miscellaneous reading, while in a smaller number of cases published biographies or autobiographies of particular writers have been examined. Finally, several hundred English and a few American authors have, in response to applications, furnished the materials required,—generally in no greater detail than was desirable, but occasionally with a fulness which would have imparted a liveliness to the narration not in keeping with its purpose and surroundings.

The number of the books of which the titles are inserted in these volumes is ninety-three thousand seven hundred and eighty. No entire class of works has been excluded; but single sermons, lectures and addresses, pamphlets in general, and school-books, have been admitted only when they seemed for one reason or another to have a stronger claim to insertion than the general mass of such productions, or when, as must sometimes have happened, their form and character were unknown. In the great majority of cases the title is either given in full or abridged only by the omission of some unessential words. But in regard to a considerable number the compiler cannot feel sure that the phraseology had not been somewhat altered as well as curtailed in the only lists accessible, though never, it is hoped, to such an extent as to make it difficult to identify the book. More complete success, it is believed, has been attained, though not without occasional exceptions, in ascertaining the dates of first editions, and also, when of sufficient importance, those of last and revised editions, as well as in noting any marked variations of title, which sometimes indicate a real alteration in the scope or nature of a work, but more often apparently have a different purpose, and tend, at all events, to produce mistakes and confusion. The chief and in all respects most important source from which the lists have been collected is, of course, the printed Catalogue of the Library of the British Museum, so far as published and received. These portions include in their multitude of entries the majority of the titles contained in this Supplement under the letters A to K and W to Z inclusive, with a few under each of the other letters. Catalogues of other libraries have been consulted from time to time, and a great number of publishers' catalogues have been constantly examined and used. The whole field is covered with tolerable completeness by the English Catalogue issued by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, & Co., and the successive American catalogues of Roorbach, Kelly, Leypoldt, and Bowker, the former with fewer omissions in the number of the entries, the latter—especially those of recent years—with greater fulness and exactness in the transcription of the names and titles. Some bibliographies of particular authors, either appended to their biographies or published separately, together with the bibliographical matter, in some cases very exact and adequate, in works already referred to as biographical authorities, have supplemented information derived originally from other quarters and have furnished occasional entries not recorded elsewhere. In the field of pseudonymous literature the Dictionary of Halkett and Laing and the "Initials and Pseudonyms" of Cushing have been the chief guides, but have not always been followed, many statements in books of this kind being necessarily based upon mere rumor or conjecture. The few independent additions to entries of this class in the present work have been received from the authors themselves or from others having personal knowledge of the facts. It should be added that, with very rare exceptions, pseudonymes known to be such, with no key to the real names, have not been admitted. Besides the bibliographical authorities already enumerated, and others of minor importance, lists of their own productions have been furnished by writers in connection with their biographies, and information has been incidentally gleaned from periodical publications.

The critical extracts number seven thousand four hundred and fifty. They have been taken for the most part, as will be evident on a cursory observation of the pages, from articles in leading weekly journals. Citations have occasionally been made from the principal monthly and quarterly periodicals; but, apart from the fact that comparatively few books are reviewed in such publications, the treatment is seldom of a strictly critical character, and still more rarely embodies any description or estimate at once particular and concise. Short passages from biographical and other works have also been occasionally inserted. All the quotations were made in the course of a close examination of the articles containing them, with the object in general of selecting such expressions of opinion as were fairly representative of the whole, and, where desirable and practicable, some terse account or characterization of the subject and nature of the work reviewed. It was necessary also, in many cases, to give some consideration to the internal evidence of the competence and impartiality of the critic; and in the longer extracts, especially those which embody or sum up a general view of the qualities of a remarkable work or distinguished author, an endeavor has been made to provide agreeable and suggestive reading.

It is almost needless to say that in a compilation like this errors and omissions are likely to be more frequent than in one of a much narrower scope and demanding a much smaller amount of research. Occasional oversight or inadvertence will not seem inexcusable to any one familiar with the condition of mind induced by a long-continued sifting of materials often defective, abounding in discrepancies, suggestive at times of a deliberate intention to perplex or mislead. The amount of time and pains bestowed on innumerable points in the investigation may have seemed occasionally, even to the "harmless drudge" engaged in it, disproportionate to the end,—especially when this proved to be unattainable. There is, however, only one rule and method in all labor of this kind, and the very minuteness and multiplicity of the questions to be solved exert a constraining influence and impose conformity to the smallest obligations of the task.

Sic ingens rerum numerus jubet atque operum lex.

The chief assistance which the compiler has had in the preparation of the work has been from members of his own family. He is indebted to Mr. John Edmands, of the Philadelphia Mercantile Library, for special facilities in the use of an excellent bibliographical collection, and to Dr. Charles Warren Greene for suggestions and emendations while the volumes have been passing through the press. Nor is he willing to dismiss them from his hands without an acknowledgment of the careful and skilful aid of Mr. Joseph McCreery in the revision of the proofs.

PHILADELPHIA, May, 1891.

N.B.—Cross-references are inserted (1) from assumed to real names; (2) from the first to the last part of a compound name; (3) from titles of nobility to family names; (4) from an earlier to a later name. The references "ante, vol. i., ii., iii." are to entries in the original work, the first volume, in the copy used, including the letters A to L. References "supra" and "infra" are to entries in different parts of the Supplement.

Abbot, Ezra, LL.D., 1819–1884, b. at Jackson, Maine; studied at Phillips Academy, Exeter, N.H.; graduated at Bowdoin College in 1840, and soon afterwards settled in Cambridge, Mass., where in 1856 he became assistant librarian of Harvard College, and from 1872 till his death was Bussey Professor of New Testament Criticism and Interpretation in the Divinity School of the university. He was a member of the American Committee on the Revision of the Bible, and prepared many critical papers on disputed passages in the New Testament for transmission to the English Committee. He was also a member of the American Oriental Society, and of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and shortly before his death was tendered the degree of D.D. by the University of Edinburgh. His published writings consist almost exclusively of contributions to the Bibliotheca Sacra, the Unitarian Review, and other periodicals, and of additions to works by other writers, the most important being those which were incorporated in Dr. Gregory's Prolegomena to the 8th ed. of Tischendorf's Greek Testament, published at Leipsic. His separate publications comprise: A Classified Catalogue of the Library of the Cambridge High School, Cambridge, 1853; an edition of Jeremy Taylor's Holy Living and Dying, Bost., 1864; of Hudson's Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament, (see HUDSON, CHARLES F., infra;) of Orme's Memoir of the Controversy respecting the Three Heavenly Witnesses, Bost., 1872, 12mo, (see ORME, WILLIAM, ante, vol. ii.;) and, jointly with HACHETT, H. B., (q. v.,) of Smith's Dictionary of the Bible. 1. The Literature of the Doctrine of a Future Life; or, A Catalogue of Works relating to the Nature, Origin, and Destiny of the Soul. With Notes. Abbot, Francis Ellingwood, Ph.D., b. 1836, in Boston, Mass.; graduated at Harvard in 1859; from 1870 to 1880 was editor of The Index, a journal devoted mainly to speculative inquiry and the free discussion of religious topics, to which he contributed many articles. Excerpts from these have been published in America and in England. 1. Gleanings from the Writings of F. E. Abbot: Free Religion in a Free State. By Ross Winans. Balt., 1872, 12mo. 2. Truths for the Times, Edin., 1872, 12mo. 3. The Impeachment of Christianity; with Letters from F. P. Cobbe and F. W. Newman, giving their Reasons for rejecting Christianity, Lon., 1872, 8vo. 4. Organic Scientific Philosophy: Scientific Theism, Bost., 1885, 12mo.

"Dr. Abbot is one of the many thinkers who believe that science is destined to produce atheism, and he belongs also to the smaller number who think that it is already possible to say what that doctrine shall be. Considerably more than half of his 'Scientific Theism' is taken up with the proof that the world is intelligible. . . . The religion of the book seems to be only an appendage to a system of metaphysics. Whether true or false, this system is certainly valuable as presenting Objectivism, or the doctrine of an existence over against thought, in its extremest form."—Nation, xlii. 135.

"It is a protest against the extremes of Idealism, on the one hand, and a purely materialistic Realism, on the other. . . . It attempts to take from science much that it values, especially its blind, mindless, mechanical theories, and it gives to science, what philosophy will certainly grudge it, objective reality independent of the thinking subject. Similarly, it gives back to theism the teleology and monistic character of which modern science has robbed it; but it takes from theism a personal Deity in any commonly received sense of personality."—JOHN OWEN: Acad., xxxii. 35.

The first are formal and frigid—of the usual style of ministerial letters to Royalty; the second are characteristic and interesting; the third are equally characteristic, and still more interesting to the general reader."—Acad., v. 477.

Abbott, Edwin, 1808–1882, b. in London, was from 1827 to 1872 head master of the Philological School in Marylebone. He published some school-books, and A Concordance to the Original Poetical Works of Alexander Pope, with an Introduction by Edwin A. Abbott, Lon., 1875, 8vo.

Abbott, Rev. Edwin Abbott, D.D., b. 1838, in London, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated a senior in the classical tripos and was elected a Fellow in 1861. He was assistant master in King Edward's School, Birmingham, 1862–64, and in 1865 was appointed head master of the City of London School. He has been select preacher at both Oxford and Cambridge, and was Hulsean Lecturer in the latter university in 1876. Dr. Abbott's publications include several school-books, viz.: How to Write Clearly; How to Parse, 1878; How to Tell the Parts of Speech, 1881; Latin Prose through English Idioms, etc.; also, several religious books for children, viz.: Bible Lessons; Child's Christmas Sheaf from the Bible Fields; Good Voices: a Child's Guide to the Bible, 1871; Parables for Children, 1873; also, Hints on Home Teaching. His more important works are: 1. A Shakespearean Grammar: an Attempt to Illustrate some of the Differences between Elizabethan and Modern English, 1869, 12mo; new ed., 1871. 2. Cambridge Sermons: Preached before the University, Lon., 1875, 8vo.

"We have to do in the sermons before us with a man who fears nothing, ignores nothing, takes nothing for granted. . . . With extreme fairness, as it seems to us, Dr. Abbott faces the position of Christianity at this moment on its darkest side."—Spectator, xlviii. 887.

3. (Ed.) Bacon's Essays: with Introduction, Notes, and Index, Lon., 1876, 2 vols. 18mo. 4. Bacon and Essex: a Sketch of Bacon's Earlier Life, Lon., 1877, 8vo.

"The interest of an inquiry such as that conducted by Dr. Abbott speaks for itself; and the ability which he has brought to bear upon it will insure the fulfilment of his hope that by diligent sifting of facts and interpretations we may at least come nearer to the truth."—Sat. Rev., xliv. 19.

5. Through Nature to Christ; or, The Ascent of Worship through Illusion to the Truth, Lon., 1877, 8vo.

"Dr. Abbott thinks that the young people of our day who reject the faith of Christ because this faith demands a belief in the supernatural, and therefore incredible, may be won over to the truth by presenting the worship of Christ so that they shall be called upon to accept nothing that is unnatural or incredible. . . . We question whether his work, honest and earnest though it be, will prove of service in this way. . . . There is much in this volume which has our heartiest sympathy."—Spectator, l. 949.

6. Philochristus: Memoirs of a Disciple of the Lord, Lon., 1878, 8vo; 2d ed., same year. Anon.

"Scholarship, capacity, and a freshness and fascination due to rare literary skill are visibly impressed upon these pages; the tone is elevated, and there is preserved throughout a grave delicacy and refinement of feeling; yet the author delights in broad panoramic colouring, and the narrative moves rapidly onward, with the vividness and animation of a drama. The work bears everywhere the self-attesting signature of an original and a richly gifted mind. . . . This study of the life of Christ has some advantages over the most noted handlings of the same subject which have preceded it. More Christian than that of Strauss, more readable than that of Neander, more earnest and genuinely reverential than that of Renan, and more thorough-going than that of the author of Ecce Homo, it will reward a careful perusal by any one who is seriously interested in the subject. Its realization of the circumstances of Christ's life is perhaps unequalled, its conception of Christ's spiritual character is sublime, but its logical and historical basis is feeble."—Spectator, li. 669.

7. Oxford Sermons: Preached before the University, Lon., 1879, 8vo. 8. Onesimus: Memoirs of a Disciple of St. Paul, Lon., 1882, 8vo. Anon.

"Quite apart from the substructure of genuine scholarship upon which the story is built up, and which is wrought with an amount of skilful labour and a range of selection which will be hidden from all but the expert, the mere story itself is a fascinating piece of narration. . . . If the author had proposed no further object than to instruct and amuse the ordinary reader, he might claim to have succeeded. The pleasantness of the narrative, however, and the life-likeness of the individual portraiture, are mere accidents. The motive of the narrator is not literary, but doctrinal—or perhaps we should be more correct if we were to say that it is anti-doctrinal. The most obtrusive feature in the story to the critical reader is its amazingly ingenuous anachronism. . . . The persons named in the Acts of the Apostles and St. Paul's Epistles are compelled to talk in the critical speech of Baur and Volkmar."—Sat. Rev., liii. 605.

9. Flatland: a Romance of Many Dimensions. By A. Square. Lon., 1884, 4to. Anon.

"He tells of his mysterious and painful initiation into the larger world of Three Dimensions. . . . Flatland is inhabited by a race whose shape is that of geometrical figures. The women are straight lines, the men vary from triangles in the lower orders to circles in the highest. . . . Much of it will be read with amusement, as satire, by those who do not appreciate its scientific bearing. . . . The assumption of the author is worked out with wonderful consistency, and his mathematics are thoroughly sound."—Spectator, lvii. 1583.

10. Francis Bacon: an Account of his Life and Works, Lon., 1885, 8vo.

"Dr. Abbott's volume on Bacon maintains pretty much the same view of Bacon's career as Dean Church's more concise and also more elegant one. . . . One thing only will be wanting to this kind of teaching, but a vital one. It will not have the qualities of searching and serious criticism, the power of realizing the conditions of a society widely different from one's own."—Sat. Rev., lix. 761.

"If diligent study of all that Bacon wrote, combined with a general knowledge of the history of his times, had been sufficient to make a perfect biography, Dr. Abbott would have no one to question his claim to that title. Unfortunately, though his apparatus would have been complete if the subject of his biography had lived in the nineteenth century, and therefore in an atmosphere with which both author and reader are familiar, it is not enough when the subject of the biography has been dead for more than two hundred years. The author who would succeed under such conditions must be, not merely thoroughly, but instinctively, familiar with the problems of the age in which the personage he describes lived, and with the aims and ideas which were natural to it, however strange they may seem to us. It is in this necessary knowledge that Dr. Abbott most distinctly fails."—S. R. GARDINER: Acad., xxvii. 411.

11. The Kernel and the Husk: Letters on Spiritual Christianity. By the Author of "Philochristus" and "Onesimus." Lon., 1886, p. 8vo. Anon.

"This remarkable book may be regarded as a natural complement of the author's previous works, Philochristus and Onesimus. It affords a reply to some such question as this: Assuming the origin and early growth of Christianity to be what you represent, how do you propose to apply your method and conclusions to the practical needs of Christian theology in the present day? . . . He wishes to substitute for a miraculous a non-miraculous, or, as he terms it, a spiritual Christianity. . . . Incidental defects might be noticed, but they are scarcely worth mention in view of the many excellencies of his work. In my opinion it is one of the most noteworthy productions of recent English theology. No candid reader, of whatever school of thought, can rise from its perusal without being equally interested and instructed."—JOHN OWEN: Acad., xxxi. 123.

"The work resolves itself on examination into three connected parts, one of which is personal and biographical, one is philosophical and constructive, and one is critical and theological. The first tells how doubts arose, how the author partly fought and overcame them, and how some of them overcame him; the second describes and justifies the method by which he has reached the goal, and sets forth the basis on which his belief rests; and the third part criticises the ordinary belief in the miraculous, and seeks to substitute belief in the naturalness of the Divine for belief in the miraculous. The whole book is of great interest, apart from the vast issues discussed in it, because it affords us a curious insight into the workings of an individual mind of unusual versatility and quickness of apprehension, and also of quite unusual culture." —Spectator, lx. 264.

"As scholars and as editors Messrs. Abdy and Walker have done their work well. . . . For one thing the editors deserve special commendation. They have presented Gaius to the reader with few notes, and those merely by way of reference or necessary explanation. Thus the Roman jurist is allowed to speak for himself, and the reader feels that he is really studying Roman law in the original, and not a fanciful representation of it."—Athenæum.

2. (Trans.) The Institutes of Justinian, with Notes, Lon., 1876, cr. 8vo.

"We welcome here a valuable contribution to the study of jurisprudence. The text of the Institutes is occasionally perplexing, even to practised scholars, whose knowledge of classical models does not always avail them in dealing with the technicalities of legal phraseology. Nor can the ordinary dictionaries be expected to furnish all the help that is wanted. This translation will then be of great use. To the ordinary student, whose attention is distracted from the subject-matter by the difficulty of struggling through the language in which it is contained, it will be almost indispensable."—Spectator.

"'The Emancipation of Massachusetts' is a catching title, but Mr. Adams fails to show from what she has been emancipated, or by whom. His eleven chapters are, in effect, so many distinct essays on distinct subjects, connected only by his assumption that in all these matters the Puritan clergy were wrong, and in most of them the clerical element was finally defeated."—Nation, xliv. 189.

Adams, Charles Follen, b. 1842, at Dorchester, Mass.; has been a frequent contributor to periodicals, chiefly of humorous poems in German-English. Some of these have been published in book form under the title of: 1. Leedle Yawcob Strauss, and other Poems, Bost., 1877, 12mo. 2. Dialect Ballads. Illust. N. York, 1887, 12mo.

Adams, Charles Francis, LL.D., [ante, vol. i., add.,] d. 1886, æt. 79. He was elected member of Congress for the third district of Massachusetts in 1858, and re-elected in 1860, but resigned in the spring of 1861 on his appointment as U.S. minister to England, a post which he continued to occupy until 1868. His services in this capacity during an eventful and critical period belong to the history of American diplomacy. In 1871–72 he acted as arbitrator for the United States in the Commission which sat at Geneva to settle the "Alabama" claims. An attempt on the part of a body of independent voters to secure his nomination for the Presidency in 1872 proved unsuccessful. No biography of Mr. Adams has yet been published or announced, though he may be supposed to have left copious materials for such a work. The fullest sketch of his career that has yet appeared may be found in an article in Lippincott's Magazine, vol. vii. p. 357, which was written by his friend Dr. John Gorham Palfrey. Besides the works mentioned in vol. i. and some contributions to the North American Review, he published: 1. What makes Slavery a Question of National Concern: a Lecture, Bost., 1855, 8vo. 2. Address at the Opening of the New Town Hall in Braintree, [with an Appendix,] Bost., 1858, 8vo. 3. Life of John Adams. Begun by John Quincy Adams. Phila., 1871, 2 vols. 16mo. (Published originally in Life and Works of John Adams, q. v., ante, vol. i.)

"In the compact and attractive form in which the biography now appears apart from the works, it will be likely to have, as it deserves, a wide circulation."—Nation, xii. 293.

4. The Struggle for Neutrality in America: an Address, N. York, 1871, 8vo. 5. An Address on the Life, Character, and Services of W. H. Seward, Albany, 1873, 8vo. 6. (Ed.) Memoirs of John Quincy Adams: comprising Portions of his Diary from 1795 to 1848, Phila., 1874–77, 12 vols. 8vo.

"It is not from a literary point of view that these volumes are to be judged. They are the truthful record of the acts and opinions of a very eminent man during a very remarkable period of history; a period into which more rises and falls of empires and more sudden changes in the fortunes of individuals were crowded together than in any other period since history began. . . . In many of these events Mr. Adams had borne a conspicuous part. With many of the actors he was personally acquainted. Others he had seen at a distance. . . . He had helped make international law, and there was not one of his American colleagues who might not have sat reverently at his feet when he discoursed of history."—Nation, xxiii. 288.

Familiar Letters of John Adams and his Wife, Abigail Adams, during the Revolution: with a Memoir of Mrs. Adams, N. York, 1876, 12mo.

"This volume takes its place by the side of the most valuable documents of our Revolutionary history."—Nation, xxii. 101.

Adams, Charles Francis, second son of the preceding, b. 1835, in Boston; graduated at Harvard College 1856; admitted to the bar 1858; served in the volunteer army throughout the civil war, and was mustered out with the brevet rank of brigadier-general. In 1869 he was appointed a member of the board of railroad commissioners of Massachusetts; from 1879 to 1882 he was one of the arbitrators of the railroads of the Northern States, becoming in the latter year sole arbitrator; and in 1884 he was elected president of the Union Pacific Railway. 1. White, in 1885. Besides contributions to periodical literature, he has published: 1. Democracy and Monarchy in France from the Inception of the Great Revolution to the Overthrow of the Second Empire, N. York, 1874, 8vo.

"Mr. Adams works out his theory with abundant citation of authorities and illustration in a style which is always clear and often impressive, and with a certain air of dogmatic dignity which is perhaps due to the fact that the book originated in a series of college lectures."—Nation, xx. 28.

Adams, Francis, M.D., LL.D., 1796–1861, b. at Lumphanan, Aberdeenshire; educated at King's College, Aberdeen, where he graduated as M.A.; removed to London, and became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1815, but returned to Scotland and settled as a medical practitioner in the village of Banchory Ternan, where he spent the remainder of his life actively engaged in the exercise of his profession, while devoting much time to scholastic study and research, especially in Greek literature. Besides contributions to medical and classical journals, and an appendix to Dunbar's Greek Lexicon, he published: 1. (Trans.) Hero and Leander: from the Greek of Musæus; with other Poems, Aberdeen, 1820. 2. Hermes Philologus; or, An Inquiry into the Causes of the Difference between Greek and Latin Syntax, Lon., 1826, 8vo. 3. (Trans.) The Seven Books of Paulus Ægineta. With a Commentary. (Sydenham Soc. Pub.) Lon., 1844–47, 3 vols. 8vo. (The first volume was originally issued in 1834 by a publisher whose failure caused a suspension of the work.)

"The translation is useful, as the only English one of the writer, but the chief value of the work resides in the commentary, which shows wide and accurate learning, and gives a fuller account of Greek and Roman medicine (to some extent, of Arabian also) than is elsewhere accessible in English, or perhaps in any modern language. Considering the isolated position of the writer, remote from great libraries and immersed in professional work, it is a very remarkable performance."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., i. 95.

The History of Japan from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. Vol. I., to the Year 1864, Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"Mr. Adams has executed his task, as far as it has gone, with great care, and the only fear is that to those not previously interested in Japan or the Far East, there may be too much of detail, and too many extracts from Blue-books and despatches."—SIR RUTHERFORD ALCOCK: Acad., v. 593.

Adams, Henry, third son of Charles Francis Adams, b. 1838, in Boston, and graduated at Harvard College 1858; was private secretary to his father, then minister to England, from 1861 to 1868. From 1870 to 1877 he was assistant professor of history at Harvard. He then went to London to reside for the second time, and on returning to this country a few years later settled in Washington, where he is engaged in writing a history of Jefferson's administration. He has contributed to the periodical press, and was for some time editor of the North American Review. 1. (Ed.) Documents relating to New England Federation, 1800–1815, Boston, 1877. 2. (Ed.) Writings of Albert Gallatin, Phila., 1879, 3 vols. 8vo. 3. The Life of Albert Gallatin, Phila., 1879, 8vo.

"He seems, very wrongly, to have made up his mind when he took his task in hand that Gallatin's was not a picturesque character or an interesting life, and could not be made the one or the other. . . . It would almost seem as if he had argued himself into the German professional belief that vivacity is trickery, and that there is some positive merit in dulness. Accordingly, what is in fact one of the most valuable contributions of the day to an almost unknown period of American history is likely to find its way unread to the shelves of the library."—Nation, xxix. 128.

"To Mr. Adams Randolph is, if not quite a lay figure on which to hang historical drapery, at least a cadaver, to be curiously dissected for the instruction of an interested class. However this may detract from the interest of the book as a biography, it very much increases its value to the political student."—Nation, xxxv. 514.

Public Debts: an Essay in the Science of Finance, N. York, 1887, 8vo.

"Dr. Adams has rendered an important service in this painstaking treatise both to financial science in general and to American financial history in particular. The social, political, and industrial effects of public borrowing and of interest-paying are methodically unfolded. The mysteries and sophisms that have grown up like weeds about public debts are cleared away in language addressed to scholars, but not too recondite to be understood by any reader of fair education."—Nation, xlv. 195.

Addison, Thomas, M.D., 1793–1860, b. at Long Benton, near Newcastle, Eng., was educated at Newcastle Grammar-School and at the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated M.D. in 1815. He went to London and became connected, first as student, then as lecturer and physician, with Guy's Hospital, where he acquired a high reputation as a clinical teacher and did more than any of his colleagues to establish the fame of the hospital as a medical school. He never obtained a large practice as a physician, but devoted himself to teaching and original investigation. His researches on pneumonia were much in advance of his time, but his chief claim to medical fame rests on his discovery of the rare disease known as "Addison's disease," which was announced in his Essay on Disease of the Supra-Renal Capsules. 1. Agassiz, Alexander, B.S., b. 1835, at Neuchâtel, Switzerland, only son of Jean Louis Rodolphe Agassiz, infra, by his first wife, Cécile Braun. He followed his father to the United States in 1849, graduated at Harvard College in 1855, and studied engineering at the Lawrence Scientific School, where he took the degree of B.S. in 1857. In 1859 he went to California as assistant on the U.S. Coast Survey, and on his return to Cambridge became connected with the Museum of Comparative Zoology. From 1866 to 1869 he was superintendent of the Calumet and Hecla copper-mines, Lake Superior, which, partly through his geological knowledge, were developed into the richest in the world. After his father's death he was made Curator of the Museum at Cambridge, and retained that position till 1885, when he resigned on account of ill health. He was Director of the Penikese School of Natural History during the summer of 1873, and afterwards established at his own cost a school of zoology at Newport. Mr. Agassiz's special branch is marine zoology, and he assisted Sir Wyville Thompson in arranging the collections of the Challenger and wrote the report on the Echini. He has contributed numerous papers to scientific periodicals and to the proceedings of scientific societies with which he is connected. Some of these, reissued separately, are mentioned below. 1. List of the Echinoderms, 1863, 8vo. 2. North American Acalephæ. Illust. 1865, imp. 8vo. 3. Preliminary Report on the Echini and Star-Fishes dredged in Deep Water between Cuba and the Florida Reef by L. F. de Pourtalès, 1869, 8vo. 4. With Garman, S. W., (ed.) Exploration of Lake Titicaca, 1875–76, 4 vols. 8vo. 5. Obituary. [A biographical notice of Count L. F. de Pourtalès.] From an American Journal of Science. By A. Ag. Cambridge, Mass., 1880. 6. Review of the Echini, (Challenger Reports.) Illust. Lon., 1872–74, 2 vols. 4to. 7. Three Cruises of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey Steamer Blake: a Contribution to American Thalassography, from 1877 to 1880. Illust. Bost. and Lon., 1888, 2 vols. r. 8vo.

"In spite of the valuable observations with which it teems, we confess to considerable disappointment with the book. Whenever confronted with one of the great general problems to which oceanic researches necessarily lead, Prof. Agassiz displays a lack of lucidity, an inability to marshal facts in their logical sequence, which detract seriously from the scientific value of the work. . . . Where, however, Prof. Agassiz deals with his special subjects—as, for example, in the history of the West Indian Echinoidea—he is most instructive."—Ath., No. 3168.

Agassiz, Mrs. Elizabeth Cabot, daughter of Thomas Graves Cary, of Boston, Mass., married, 1850, to Professor Louis Agassiz, (infra.) She accompanied her husband on his journey to Brazil in 1865–66 and in the Hassler expedition of 1871–72, of which she wrote an account for the Atlantic Monthly, and was associated with him in many of his studies and writings. 1. A First Lesson in Natural History. By Actæa. Illust. Bost., 1859. Republished with the author's name, 1879, 24mo. 2. Geological Sketches, edited by E. C. A., 1866. 3. (Ed.) Louis Agassiz: his Life and Correspondence, Bost., 1885, 2 vols. 8vo.

"These volumes are an account not so much of a life as of a life-work, the story less of a person than of a mind; and the place of affairs, in which biography is usually immersed, is taken by facts and theories of science. . . . The personal thread, however, vanishing and reappearing, runs like a golden strand through it all, though there is always a regret that it should be so slight. . . . The story is one of those shining examples of plain living and high thinking which are like wells of pure water in a dry land. . . . The enthusiasm which Agassiz always kindled in others is felt throughout the work as his saving force within; and the spirit which is preserved in these pages must always be a rousing and sustaining influence for the scientific life under its trials."—Nation, xli. 365.

"This record of his life and work is distinguished no less by judgment and good taste than by fulness of scientific knowledge; while the simplicity and earnestness with which it is written lend it a peculiar charm and interest. It is neither redundant nor meagre; the scientific student (despite some modest words of doubt in the preface) will find the course of Agassiz's work sufficiently traced in it, while the general reader will be attracted by its lively portraiture of a generous character joined to a noble intellect."—Spectator, lviii. 1703.

Agassiz, Jean Louis Rodolphe, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1807–1873. His biography divides with singular evenness into two sections, the one belonging to the annals of European, the other to those of American scientific research. The most important of his original studies and theories belong to the former period; his labors in America tended to become more and more those of a teacher and organizer. From 1851 to 1854 he was professor of comparative anatomy and zoology in the Charleston (S.C.) Medical College. He then returned to Cambridge, and on the establishment of the Museum of Comparative Zoology in 1859 became its curator, devoting much of his time to increasing and arranging its collection. In 1865 he planned a voyage to Brazil, partly for his health, which, through the liberality of Mr. Nathaniel Thayer, a Boston merchant, was turned into a well-equipped scientific expedition, lasting sixteen months. In 1868 he was appointed a non-resident professor of natural history at Cornell University and delivered a course of lectures there. He made another scientific journey in 1871–72 round Cape Horn in the U.S. Coast Survey steamer Hassler. In 1873 he opened the Penikese Summer School of Natural History, on an endowment made by Mr. John Anderson, of New York, and lectured there throughout the summer. About the same time he began a series of articles for the Atlantic Monthly on Evolution and Permanence of Type, only one of which was ever finished. He died at Cambridge after a short illness, and was buried at Mt. Auburn, where his grave is marked by a boulder from the glacier of the Aar. A complete list of his numerous contributions to the transactions and proceedings of scientific societies is given in the catalogue of scientific papers published by the Royal Society of London. 1. Contributions to the Natural History of the United States: I., An Essay on Classification; II., Embryology of the Turtle; III., Acalephs in general: Ctenophoræ; IV., Dicophoræ; Hydroidæ; Homologues of the Radiata, 1857–62, 4 vols. 8vo. Vol. V., left unfinished, was edited and published by his son. 2. The Structure of Animal Life: Six Lectures, Brooklyn, 1862–65. 3. Methods of Study in Natural History, 1863, 12mo. 4. Geological Studies, Bost., 1866–76, 2 vols. 5. Centennial Anniversary of A. von Humboldt, 1869, 8vo. 6. Report of the Deep-Sea Dredging during the Third Cruise of the U.S. Steamer Bibb, 1869. Pamph. "The information is everywhere very full, great care having been taken to collect large masses of statistics from various sources, and yet, while this is so, the author is not lost behind a mass of opinions and observations of others, but the practical aim of the work is throughout kept in view, and we are conscious to a very large extent of reading the outcome of a large and wide experience. We know of no text-book of surgery where fulness of detail is more successfully blended with the record of personal experience and opinion."—Lancet, May 3, 1884.

"Without anything remarkable in power or new in incident, Mr. Aïdé always succeeds in engaging and holding our attention. And we think this is done chiefly by his great carefulness. The plot is carefully worked out, without . . . that ignoring of likelihood, and even possibility, so common in the hurriedly-written novels of the present day. And he is careful in his writing: his English is simple, correct, and elegant. Moreover, he is always on the side of high principle and pure morality."—Spectator, lxvi. 929.

Ainsworth, William Francis, Ph.D., L.R.C.S., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., [ante, vol. i., add.,] a cousin of the novelist W. Harrison Ainsworth, infra; b. 1807, at Exeter, Eng.; studied medicine in Edinburgh, and received the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons. In 1835 he was attached as physician and naturalist to Chesney's Euphrates Expedition, and in 1838 he was sent by the Geographical Society and the Society for the Diffusion of Christian Knowledge into Asia Minor to explore the river Halys, and to investigate the condition of the Christians in Kurdistan. Returning to London in 1841, he devoted himself to literary work, and was proprietor and editor for a time of the New Monthly Magazine. 1. Illustrated Universal Gazetteer, Lon., 1863, r. 8vo. 2. (Ed.) Wanderings in Every Clime. Illust. Lon., 1870, 4to. 3. A Personal Narrative of the Euphrates Expedition, Lon., 1888, 2 vols. 8vo.

"It is an antiquary's note-book, not a graphic narrative of the expedition itself. . . . Nevertheless, it is not a small service to have gathered together from a multitude of sources, not always easily accessible, a mass of topographical information and materials for antiquarian debate on a vast number of ancient sites, the importance and interest of which are alike beyond dispute."—Ath., No. 3191.

Ainsworth, William Harrison, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1805–1882, made his first appearance in literature while still in his teens, and continued writing up to the time of his death. The authorship of "Sir John Chiverton," (erroneously printed "John Cheverton" in vol. i.,) a novel which appeared anonymously in 1826, and which was praised by Sir Walter Scott, was for forty years attributed to Ainsworth, but has since been claimed by Mr. John Partington Aston. Mr. W. E. A. Axon, in his notice of Ainsworth, (Dictionary of National Biography, vol. i.,) surmises that the book may have been a joint production of the two young men. Ainsworth was author in part of a volume called December Tales, published in 1823, which with others of his earlier works has long since been scarce and out of print. In 1840 he succeeded Dickens as editor of Bentley's Miscellany, in which magazine Jack Sheppard had appeared during the previous year, with illustrations by Cruikshank. In 1842 he established Ainsworth's Magazine, which came to an end in 1853. He was also for many years editor and proprietor of the New Monthly Magazine. He was very popular in society, and his home at Kensal Manor House was famous for its hospitality, Dickens, Thackeray, Jerrold, and other literary men being among his guests. In 1881 a banquet was given to him at Manchester, at which the mayor of the city, in a speech proposing the health of the author, gave the following statistics illustrating his popularity in his native town: "In our Manchester public free libraries there are two hundred and fifty volumes of Mr. Ainsworth's different works. During the last twelve months those volumes have been read seven thousand six hundred and sixty times, mostly by the artisan class of readers. And this means that twenty volumes of his works are being perused in Manchester by readers of the free libraries every day all the year through." The editor of Men of the Reign informs us that "Mr. Ainsworth's writings are still popular in America." It may be doubted, however, whether their circulation among the readers throughout the United States is comparable to that which, as we have seen, they enjoy in a single town in England. The following alphabetical list of his productions—of which only a few, and these, for the most part, without dates, are mentioned in vol. i.—is believed to be complete. Auriol, and other Tales, 1880. Ballads, Romantic, Fantastic, and Humorous, 1855. Beatrice Tyldesley, 1878. Beau Nash; or, Bath in the Eighteenth Century, 1879. Boscobel, 1872. Cardinal Pole, 1863. Star Chamber (The), 1854. Talbot Harland, 1870. Tower Hill, 1871. Tower of London (The), 1840. Windsor Castle, 1843.

"The charm of Ainsworth's novels is not at all dependent upon the analysis of motives or subtle description of character. Of this he has little or nothing; but he realizes vividly a scene or incident, and conveys the impression with great force and directness to the reader's mind."—W. E. A. Alcott, Louisa May, 1832–1888, daughter of A. B. Alcott, supra, was born in Germantown, Pa. When she was two years old the family moved to Boston, and six years later settled in Concord, Mass. Thoreau was for a time Miss Alcott's teacher, but her education was mainly conducted by her father. In 1862 she went to Washington as a volunteer army nurse, and spent many months in the hospitals, writing letters to her mother and sister, which were printed in the Boston Commonwealth. She subsequently travelled in Europe, and after her return wrote "Little Women," which had an instantaneous success, the sales amounting in three years to 87,000 copies. She was a frequent contributor to magazines, &c. Her popularity as a writer for the young has scarcely been exceeded by that of any other American writer. Aldrich, Thomas Bailey, [ante, vol. i., add.,] b. 1836, at Portsmouth, N.H., passed a portion of his early life in Louisiana, and on the death of his father entered the counting-house of an uncle in New York City, where he remained three years and began to write in prose and verse for periodicals. His subsequent career has been wholly literary. He contributed to Putnam's Magazine, the Knickerbocker Magazine, the New York Evening Mirror, and other journals, and was for three years (1856–59) on the staff of N. P. Willis's Home Journal. He was editor of Every Saturday from its commencement until its close in 1874, and in 1881, on the retirement of Mr. Howells from the Atlantic Monthly, succeeded him as editor of that magazine, to which he had for some time been a frequent contributor. As only two of his earliest books are mentioned in vol. i., a full list is here subjoined. 1. The Bells: a Collection of Chimes. By T. B. A. N. York, 1855, 12mo. 2. The Ballad of Babie Bell, and other Poems, Bost., 1856, 12mo. 3. Daisy's Necklace, and What Came of It, N. York, 1857, 12mo. 4. The Course of True Love never did run Smooth, N. York, 1858, 12mo. 5. "A slight sketch of New England life, with numerous bits of satire and humor, in which many of the peculiarities of the people of that section are touched upon in the usual manner."—Nation, xix. 207.

"Mr. Aldrich is perhaps entitled to stand at the head of American humourists. The little work in this line he has hitherto done is singularly fresh, original, and delicate. . . . The only fault that can reasonably be urged against it is a certain measure of artifice. It is like a conjuring feat, which loses its interest after it has been often seen and the mechanical trick on which it depends is discovered. . . . In 'Prudence Palfrey' he attempts to employ in a long story a device which has told admirably in less important experiments. Once more he succeeds."—Ath., No. 2441.

"It records the impressions of a literary American as to some of the differences between the Old World and the New. . . . Mr. Aldrich's eyes are primarily those of a poet. He has the sensitive temperament of a poet, and a poet's delicacy of expression. . . . A dash of somewhat extravagant humor is thrown in, but this often seems to be done in obedience to the fashion of the day."—Nation, xxxviii. 84.

Alexander, Frances, or Francesca, b. in Boston, daughter of Francis Alexander, an American artist, who, after gaining reputation as a portrait-painter, went to Europe, about 1830, and fixed his residence at Florence. Miss Alexander's inherited talent was early developed, and excited the admiration of visitors, her drawings being pronounced by J. L. Motley in 1855 (Correspondence, vol. i. p. 182) superior in facility, grace, and purity to those of any modern artist he had ever seen. It was not, however, till many years later that Mr. Ruskin's enthusiastic appreciation of her work made the name of "Francesca" widely known. Under his auspices she has published three works, which evince an intimate knowledge of the habits and ideas of the peasantry in the Tuscan valleys, in one or another of which she has been accustomed to spend a portion of each year. 1. The Story of Ida: Epitaph on an Etrurian Tomb. By Francesca. Edited, with Preface, by John Ruskin. With full-page Steel Engravings. Orpington, Kent, 1883, cr. 8vo; 3d ed., 1889. 2. Roadside Songs of Tuscany: Translated and Illustrated by Francesca Alexander. Edited by John Ruskin, LL.D. (With Articles by Mr. Ruskin on Domestic Usefulness, the Virtues necessary to Sainthood, the Priestly Office, and Gypsy Character.) Orpington, 1884–88, 10 parts, or 1 vol., medium 4to.

"These songs and hymns of the poor people . . . are but the siftings, so to say, of hundreds and hundreds which I have heard and learnt, mostly from old people; many of them have never, so far as I know, been written down before, and others it would be impossible now to find. . . . I have done my best to save a little of what is passing away." —Extract from Preface.

"The figure-drawings of Miss Alexander are simple portraiture, of an artlessness, in every sense of the word, carried to its extreme. Her flower-drawing . . . is quite unsurpassable in line-work, for all she does is done with the pen. . . . As for the literary interest which Ruskin has found in Miss Alexander's records of the poetry and life around her, there can be no surprise. . . . Miss Alexander's books (she made another, previous to her acquaintance with Professor Ruskin, which now belongs to Mr. Quincy Shaw) are works of a kind which, from their fidelity to the inspirations and character of the peasant life in which she has found the inspiration of her own, merit perpetuity."—Nation, xxxviii. 472.

Alexander, William, LL.D., b. 1826, at Chapel of Garioch, Aberdeenshire, Scotland; educated at the parochial school; passed his early life in manual labor on a farm, from herdboy to ploughman, and in consequence of exposure and injuries broke wholly down in health and had to submit to amputation of the right leg. When 27 years of age he became a newspaper reporter, and he has since been steadily engaged as a journalist, in various departments, in connection with the Aberdeen Free Press, which he assisted in founding. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Aberdeen in 1886. Besides contributions to several magazines, he has published: 1. Johnny Gibb of Gushetneuk, in the Parish of Pyketillum: with Glimpses of the Parish Politics about A.D. 1843. (With Glossary of the Aberdeenshire Dialect.) Aberdeen, 1871, 8vo. Nine editions have appeared, of which the seventh is illustrated with portraits and landscapes by George Reid, R.S.A. 2. Sketches of Life among my Ain Folk, Edin., 1875, fp. 8vo; 2d ed.

"The life of rural Aberdeenshire at this period [the early part of the present century] has been set forth with marvellous fidelity by Dr. William Alexander in his works 'Johnny Gibb of Gushet Neuk' and 'Life among my Ain Folk,'—more especially, I venture to think, in the latter. Whoever wishes to understand the undemonstrative, douce, thrifty, plodding, unimaginative, and yet affectionate and sternly faithful nature of that particular variety of the Scot will find it drawn to the life in these books."—W. Robertson Nicoll: James Macdonell, Journalist, p. 9.

Alexander, Rev. William Lindsay, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S.E., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1808–1884, educated in the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews, was pastor of a Scotch Congregational church in Edinburgh 1835–54; became professor of theology and afterwards principal in the Congregational Theological College, Edinburgh, 1854; examiner in philosophy at St. Andrews University 1861; and was a member of the Old Testament Revision Company from its beginning. Besides the works mentioned in vol. i., and several articles in the 8th edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, he wrote: 1. Christ and Christianity: a Vindication of the Divine Authority of the Christian Religion, 1854. 2. Iona, the Druids' Isle, and its Successive Inhabitants, 1855. 3. An Ancient British Church: Inquiry into the History of Christianity in Britain previous to the Heptarchy, 1857. 4. Christian Thought and Work, 1862. 5. St. Paul at Athens, 1865, 12mo. 6. "The simple and loving record of a happy, industrious, and holy life. It is no doubt impossible for a near relative to form any but the most partial and imperfect estimate of the public or literary career of a dear husband or parent, or of the exact value of his labours when compared with those of others toiling in the same field. Mrs. Alford's good sense has prompted her to delegate this portion of a biographer's task to such as were better able to accomplish it. . . . Every other qualification for the office which she had undertaken Dean Alford's widow possesses to the full."—Sat. Rev., xxxvi. 25.

Alford, Very Rev. Henry, D.D., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1810–1871, was Vicar of Wymeswold, Leicestershire, 1835–53, when he removed to London, and was minister of Quebec Chapel, Marylebone, till 1857, when he was appointed Dean of Canterbury. He had a high reputation as a preacher, and was an active and liberal churchman, maintaining friendly relations with the leading nonconformist preachers. A man of varied accomplishments, he had also an extraordinary power of sustained work. In addition to his labors in Biblical research and literature, his earnest parish activities, and private tuition, he wrote hymns, composed vocal and instrumental music, painted in water-colors, and contributed in prose and verse to periodicals. He was the first editor of the Contemporary Review, established in 1866, and contributed largely to its pages, as also to Good Words and other periodicals. A full list of his writings, including single sermons and other pamphlets, and articles in magazines, &c., not reprinted, is given in the Appendix to the Life by Mrs. Alford, supra. The following list of books, omitting pamphlets, completes that given ante, vol. i.:

1. Memoir of Rev. Henry Alford, Lon., 1854. (This book, which is a biography of his father, the Vicar of Ampton, near Bury St. Edmund's, is incorrectly referred to in vol. i. as a Life of the Dean (then Vicar of Wymeswold) by his son.) 2. Quebec Chapel Sermons: vol. iv., 1855, 8vo; vol. iii., 1856, 8vo; vol. v., 1856, 8vo; vols. vi., vii., 1857, 8vo. 3. Homilies on the First Ten Chapters of the Acts of the Apostles, Lon., 1857. 4. Four Sermons on the Parable of the Sower, Camb., 1858. 5. The Greek Testament, vol. iv., Part II., 1860, 8vo; 2d ed., 1862. (Of vols. i. and ii. the 5th ed. was published in 1863–65; of vol. iii. the 3d ed. in 1861; of vol. iv., Part I., the 2d ed. in 1866. In most of these editions many revisions were made. An abridged ed. was published in 1868, 1 vol., and a new ed. of the complete work in 1871, 4 vols. 8vo.)

"We only give expression to the view which has been formed of Dean Alford's edition by the chief theological scholars of the country when we say that the work is too large for one man."—Sat. Rev., xi. 402.

"His work forms an epoch in Biblical studies in England; and, though separate portions of the Greek Testament have since been more fully dealt with by others, it is as yet unapproached as a whole."—CANON FREMANTLE, in Dict. of Nat. Biog., i. 283.

6. The Odyssey of Homer: in English Hendecasyllable Verse: Twelve Books, Lon., 1861. 7. The New Testament for Eoglish Readers, vol. i., Part I., 1862. 8. Alger, J. G. The New Paris Sketch-Book: Men, Manners, and Institutions, Lon., 1887, p. 8vo.

Alger, Rev. William Rounseville, [ante, vol. i., add.] In 1855 he became pastor of the Bullfinch Street (Unitarian) Church, Boston; in 1858 succeeded Theodore Parker as minister of the Twenty-Eighth Congregational Society of Boston; in 1874 removed to New York, where he was pastor of the Unitarian Church of the Messiah from 1875 to 1878; went thence to Denver, Chicago, and Portland, and in 1881 returned to Boston. Besides the works mentioned in vol. i., he has published: 1. The Solitudes of Nature and of Man; or, The Loneliness of Human Life, Bost., 1867.

"His readers are sure to be offended by his great diffuseness and frequent displays of fine writing. . . . It is the concluding portion, that devoted to illustrative examples, which shows the author in the best light."—Nation, iv. 206.

2. The Friendships of Women, Bost., 1868.

"He is, to our perception, a purely sentimental writer; a fact which, under the circumstances, carries with it several aids, and as many impediments, to the happy execution of his aims."—Nation, v. 522.

3. Prayers offered in the Massachusetts House of Representatives during the Session of 1868, Bost., 1869. 4. The End of the World and the Day of Judgment, Bost., 1870, 12mo. 5. The Sword, the Pen, and the Pulpit, Bost., 1870. 6. Tribute to Charles Dickens, Bost., 1870, 16mo. 7. The Life of Edwin Forrest, the American Tragedian. Illust. Phila., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The book before us is not a model biography; it is elaborate, painstaking, exact, in general just and pleasantly free from fulsome eulogy of its subject; but it is also diffuse, prolix, lacking in proper chronological proportion, full of repetitions, and crammed with impertinent digressions. . . . It will do much for the memory of Forrest. It will no longer be possible for any one to think of the actor as a burly ruffian whose legs and lungs were more powerful than his brain. Mr. Alger shows him to us as a lover of his art, a student of Shakspere, a man with a tender heart and an open purse."—Nation, xxv. 124.

"Mr. Alger has done his work as regards Forrest in a very impartial manner; he has not corrected his faults, nor has he deliberately exaggerated his good points, for the grandiloquent way in which he writes of them must be taken as merely a part of his own inflated style."—Spectator, li. 186.

8. The School of Life, Bost., 1881, 12mo.

Alice Maud Mary, Princess of Great Britain and Grand Duchess of Hesse-Darmstadt, 1843–1870, second daughter of Queen Victoria; married in 1862 to Prince Frederick William Louis of Hesse, who succeeded his brother as Grand Duke in 1877. She took a strong interest in literature and art, in religious speculations, and in philanthropic schemes, and cultivated an intimacy with Strauss, who read to her his life of Voltaire in manuscript and dedicated the work to her on its publication. Some German translations from her pen of essays by Miss Octavia Hill on the Homes of the London Poor appeared with a Preface signed "A." Alice, Grand Duchess of Hesse, Princess of Great Britain and Ireland: Biographical Sketch and Letters. With Portrait. Lon., 1884, cr. 8vo. (The memoir, with a German translation of the letters, by Dr. Sell, of Darmstadt, had been published in the previous year. In the English volume the original letters are given with a translation of the memoir and a preface by the Princess Christian.)

3. (Ed.) Scotland and Scotsmen in the Eighteenth Century. From the MSS. of John Ramsay, Esq., of Ochtertyre. Edin. and Lon., 1888, 2 vols. 8vo.

"This is as good a book of its kind—a somewhat superficial and artificial kind, it must be allowed—as has yet been published on Scotland in the eighteenth century. . . . Mr. Allardyce . . . has done his work as Ramsay's editor carefully and well. In other words, he has allowed Ramsay to prattle about Scotch judges, professors, clergymen, gentry, ladies, landlords, 'worthies,' and 'men of genius and taste'—and it is of such prattlings that this book is composed—after his own fashion and in his own language." —Acad., xxxiii. 284.

"It is impossible in a few lines to afford an idea of the richly varied matter that is to be found in these volumes, —the glimpses of the fashionable world and notable personages in the early part of the century, the quaint anecdotes, the curious genealogical jottings, the notes on historical portraits and ancient folios,—the whole given, always at least when the letter is from Sharpe's own pen, in a style characterized by the crispest and most pungent wit."—Acad., xxxiv. 263.

Allen, Charles Grant Blairfindie, b. 1848, at Kingston, Canada, was educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he graduated with honors in 1871. In 1873 he became professor of logic and philosophy at Queen's College, Spanish Town, Jamaica, of which he was the principal in 1874–77. He now resides in England, and is a frequent contributor to the periodical press, his writings being chiefly of a popular scientific character. He has also published several novels, the earlier ones under the pseudonyme of "Cecil Power." 1. Physiological Æsthetics, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo.

"The book now before us, dedicated to Mr. Herbert Spencer, aims at developing certain principles briefly laid down by him in the course of his recent work on Psychology. Mr. Grant Allen has done this with very creditable success."—Sat. Rev., xliv. 304.

"He is so penetrated with his physiological theory of æsthetics that he never dreams of establishing its foundations safely before he begins to build upon it. His theory is so cut and dried, to start with, that he does not try it by experience at all, but instead carefully selects the experience which tends to support it. . . . This little book, able as it is, is a complete theoretic failure."—Spectator, l. 697 and 731.

Allibone, Samuel Austin, LL.D., 1816–1889, b. in Philadelphia; was engaged from an early age in mercantile pursuits, while devoting much time to the study of English literature and to bibliographical researches, which gradually absorbed his attention, leading to the conception of the work which has made his name familiar in all libraries throughout the English-speaking world, and which was produced by the continuous labor of more than twenty years. He took especial interest in religious literature, and was the book-editor and corresponding secretary of the American Sunday-School Union from 1867 till 1873, and from 1877 till 1879, when he removed from Philadelphia to New York, to become the librarian of the Lenox Library. His publications, excluding tracts, of which he wrote many, comprise: 1. A Review, by a Layman, of a Work entitled "New Themes for the Protestant Clergy," Phila., 1852, 12mo. Anon. The work to which this was a reply was by Stephen Colwell, q. v., ante, vol. i. 2. New Themes Condemned, 1853, 12mo. 3. A Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors, Living and Deceased, from the Earliest Accounts to the Latter Half of the Nineteenth Century. Containing over Forty-Six Thousand Articles, (Authors,) with Forty Indexes of Subjects. Phila., 1854–71, 3 vols. r. 8vo.

"In long and frequent use of vol. i. we have found it much more accurate than Watt's 'Bibliotheca.' The new volumes appear to be as good as the first in this and other respects. . . . He has accomplished a work for which every American scholar owes him hearty thanks."—Nation, xii. 182.

4. An Alphabetical Index to the New Testament. By S. A. A. Phila., 1868, 8vo. 5. The Divine Origin of the Holy Scriptures, 1869, 12mo. (This is the first part of the next work mentioned, published separately.) 6. The Union Bible Companion, 1871, 16mo. 7. Poetical Quotations, British and American, from Chaucer to Tennyson. With Copious Indexes. Authors, 550; Subjects, 425; Quotations, 13,600. Illust. Phila., 1873, 8vo.

"Mr. Allibone has been so far from falling into the error of being so nice in his selection of passages as to be difficult and over-fastidious, that, in our judgment, he has fallen a long way short of being duly discriminating. . . . Beyond question, however, the manual is one worth having, and is a monument of industry, busy, to be sure, rather than laborious."—Nation, xvii. 227.

8. Prose Quotations from Socrates to Macaulay. With Indexes. Phila., 1876, 8vo. 9. Great Authors of all Ages: Selections from Prose Works of Eminent Writers, Phila., 1879, 8vo.

Allies, Jabez, 1787–1856, b. at Lulsley, Worcestershire, Eng.; practised for some years as a solicitor in London; was a member of the Society of Antiquaries, and a frequent contributor on antiquarian subjects to the Archæological Journal and other periodicals. He was one of the earliest writers to take up the subject of folk-lore. 1. Observations on Certain Curious Indentations in the Old Red Sandstone of Worcestershire and Herefordshire considered as the Tracks of Antediluvian Animals. Illust. Lon., 1835, 8vo. 2. On the Causes of Planetary Motion, Lon., 1838, 8vo. 3. The Ancient British, Roman, and Saxon Antiquities of Worcestershire, Lon., 1840, 8vo. 4. The Jovial Hunter of Bromsgrove, Herne the Hunter, and Robin Hood, Lon., 1845, 8vo. 5. On the Ignis Fatuus, or Will o' the Wisp, and the Fairies, Lon., 1846, 8vo. 6. The Ancient British, Roman, and Saxon Antiquities and Folk-Lore of Worcestershire, Lon., 1852, 8vo. (This is an expansion of the small work with a similar title and of "The Ignis Fatuus.")

"It is the most interesting work on local field-names that has yet been published."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., i. 331.

Allies, Thomas William, M.A., [ante, vol. i., add.,] b. 1813, in Somersetshire, Eng., was educated at Eton and at Wadham College, Oxford, where he graduated first class in classics in 1832. Having taken holy orders, he was for some time examining chaplain to Dr.

Blomfield, Bishop of London, who in 1842 conferred upon him the living of Launton, Oxfordshire, which he resigned in 1850 on becoming a Roman Catholic. He published, in addition to works mentioned in vol. i.: 1. The Formation of Christendom, 1865–75, 3 vols. 8vo.

"Any one . . . who reads Mr. Allies may trust fully to his candour, and, as far as we can judge, rely entirely on his learning. If there be a fault in the book, it is rather in the occasional repetitions and very elaborate illustrations of the various positions he takes up, and the room for further condensation. But the style of Mr. Allies is so good, and his subject is so interesting, that we never weary even of his fullest expositions of the thinkers with whom he deals, while his criticisms from the Christian point of view are uniformly keen and clear, and occasionally brilliant and trenchant."—Spectator, xlix. 114.

Allingham, William, 1828–1889, b. at Ballyshannon, in the northwestern part of Ireland, of an old Anglo-Irish family; contributed to the London Athenæum, Household Words, and other periodicals, and was for some years editor of Fraser's Magazine, for which he wrote many prose articles. He was much influenced as a poet by the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, with which he was connected in his youth. He married in 1874 Miss Helen Patterson, a well-known artist and Associate of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours. 1. Poems, Lon., 1850, 12mo. 2. Day and Night Songs, Lon., 1854, 12mo; 2d ed., enl., with Illustrations by D. G. Rossetti, &c.; new ed., 1884. 3. Peace and War: an Ode, 1854, 8vo. 4. "With affectionate yet unfearing fidelity, the poem gives us a little plot of Ireland as it is. . . . It is Ireland in miniature. It is vital with the national character. . . . It is a plea for tenant-right; a poem for statesmen to read."—Ath., No. 1903.

6. In Fairy Land. Illust. by R. Doyle. 1870. 7. (Ed.) Choice Lyrics and Short Poems; or, Nightingale Valley, 1871, p. 8vo. 8. Rambles. By Patricius Walker, (pseud.) Lon., 1873, 8vo.

"Before his religion, morality, and philosophy, his poetry, science, archæology, etymology, biography—about all which he has many curious, new, and original little bits to say—come his descriptions of natural scenery; at least to us these are the charm of the book."—Spectator, xlvi. 313.

Allinson, Edward P., and Penrose, Boies, of the Philadelphia bar. Philadelphia, 1681–1887: a History of Municipal Development, (Johns Hopkins University Pub.,) Balt., 1887, 8vo.

"The title of this excellent book sufficiently indicates the purpose of its authors. Although their judicious treatment of the subject required the best legal furniture of their profession, as well as the thoughtful and digested learning of the historian, yet its great value will be to the student of social science, to whom the present extraordinary development of wealth and population is constantly presenting new problems of no easy solution."—Nation, xlv. 120.

Allsop, Thomas, 1795–1880, b. at Stainsborough Hall, near Wirksworth, Derbyshire; was educated at the Wirksworth Grammar-School; went to London at the age of seventeen, and some years later engaged in business as a stock-broker. He became at an early period strongly interested in the philosophical speculations of Coleridge, with whom he formed a close intimacy, and whose "favorite disciple" he has been called. He had also close relations with Hazlitt, Lamb, and Procter, and subsequently with Mazzini, Cobden, Feargus O'Connor, and other political reformers. See the notice of him by George Jacob Holyoake, with whom he left autobiographical papers, in the Dict. of Nat. Biog., i. 337. 1. Letters, Conversations, and Recollections of S. T. Coleridge, Lon., 1836, 2 vols. Anon. 3d ed., with author's name, 1864.

"As is often the case with ardent disciples. themselves of independent force of character, Allsop read into his master's mind thoughts which were his own alone, and included in his volumes some things needful to those who would judge of the many-sidedness of Coleridge, but which seemed inconsistent with the general impression of him."—*Dict. of Nat. Anderson, William, F.R.C.S., b. 1842, in London, Eng., was educated at the City of London School and under private tuition, and studied medicine at St. Thomas's Hospital, London, at the University of Aberdeen, and in Paris. In 1874–80 he was medical officer to the British Legation, Tokio, Japan, and medical director of the Japanese Naval Medical College, Tokio. He made a large collection of Japanese and Chinese paintings, which was purchased in 1882 by the Trustees of the British Museum, and exhibited 1888–89. He is now (1889) assistant-surgeon and lecturer on anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital, and examiner in anatomy for the Fellowship of the Royal College of Surgeons. He has contributed articles to medical, artistic, and literary journals, and to Murray's Hand-Book for Japan, and has also published: 1. A History of Japanese Pictorial Art, (Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan,) 1879. 2. Descriptive and Historical Catalogue of a Collection of Japanese and Chinese Paintings in the British Museum. Illust. (Brit. Museum Pub.) 1886. 3. The Pictorial Arts of Japan. With Numerous Plates, Chromo-Lithographs, and Woodcuts, and General and Descriptive Text. 4 parts. Part I., Lon., 1886, fol. Issue for England and America limited to eleven hundred copies, one hundred being artist's proofs.

"Promises to be the most complete and authoritative account as yet produced of that strange and delightful manifestation of human sentiment and the human mind which is known as Japanese art. . . . Its illustrations alone are enough to make it priceless."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 167.

4. The Pictorial Arts of Japan, Part IV., Lon., 1886.

"Mr. Anderson's great work is now complete, and the pictorial art of Japan is no longer a terra incognita, but a land mapped out and accurately surveyed, and traversed at all points with broad and beaten highways. . . . Read with his Catalogue, of which it forms the necessary complement, his magnificent treatise, so comprehensive in design and so masterly in execution, will teach the student as much as is communicable at second hand, and place him at such a point of vantage for the work of practical research as, before its appearance, could only have been gained at the cost of years of travel and inquiry."—*Sat. Illust. and Maps. Lon., 1862, 8vo; new ed., with 72 Illustrations by Vizetelly, &c., 1865.

"A really valuable work in very many respects. . . . It is the work of two writers, aided by no less than thirty-six amateur assistants. . . . Too much cannot be said in praise of the geological chapters. . . The natural history and botany are also admirably done, and the fifty-nine illustrations by Mr. Naftel and Mr. Peter Le Lièvre very nearly approach perfection as works of art, besides being minutely faithful. Add to all this the luxuries of hot-pressed and pleasantly-tinted paper, excellent type, capital maps and plans, and you have all the elements of a book which will long remain the standard authority on the subject." —Sat. Rev., xv. 444.

Arnold, Sir Edwin, M.A., C.S.I., K.C.I.E., [ante, vol. i., add.,] son of Robert Coles Arnold, and brother of Robert Arthur Arnold, infra, b. 1832, and educated at King's School, Rochester, at King's College, London, and at University College, Oxford, where he gained the Newdigate prize in 1852 for his English poem on the "Feast of Belshazzar." He graduated with honors in 1854, and became assistant master in King Edward the Sixth's School at Birmingham, but was soon afterwards appointed principal of the Government Sanscrit College at Patna, Bombay Presidency, India, and Fellow of the University of Bombay. He remained in India till 1861, when he returned to England and became connected with the London Daily Telegraph, of which he was for many years editor, and in which his articles, particularly those written at the time of the Russo-Turkish war, attracted much attention. He was made a Companion of the Star of India on the occasion of the proclamation of Queen Victoria as Empress of India in 1877, and received the second class of the imperial order of the Medjidie from the Sultan in 1876. He is a Fellow of the Royal Asiatic and Royal Geographical Societies. As only three of his earliest books are mentioned in vol. i., a full list is here given; 1. "Nobody can say that this is not a poem,—an extremely readable one,—leaving on the mind a graphic and in most respects accurate picture of the legendary life of Siddartha and of his teachings from the stand-point of a disciple. It is a true poem as a whole, while, to speak somewhat paradoxically, there is not much poetry in any individual portion of it."—Spectator, lii. 1509.

"It is full of poetical merit, and its descriptions are often exceedingly beautiful. . . . The structural influence of Mr. Tennyson's sequences upon every writer of blank verse is unavoidable; but sometimes his influence upon Mr. Arnold is more than that of mere structure."—Ath., No. 2072.

"To the fact that his devotion is traceable in kind and quality to Christian rather than Buddhist springs is to be attributed the general air of the Gospel according to St. John which his poem has. . . . In spite of having its conception furnished it, in spite of its untrustworthiness as a 'natural reproduction,' and in spite of the rarity with which anything like distinct poetry is reached in it, it not only has passages of power and passages of beauty, but it is altogether an intellectual performance of marked ability."—Nation, xxix. 314.

Embodied in a Dialogue held in the Garden of the Taj Mahal, at Agra. Lon., 1888, cr. 8vo.

"In this volume Sir Edwin Arnold endeavours, by presenting a Persian paraphrase amid exquisitely appropriate surroundings, to render its charm intelligible to modern readers. . . . He has taken the Third Chapter of the 'Bostân,' or Fruit Garden, of Sa'di, and recited it by the mouth of a venerable Munshy amid a scene more lovely and more pathetic than ever entered the imagination of Sa'di himself,—the Taj by moonlight, that dream in marble soaring up from its garden of cypress and flowers and gleaming water, with the Mirza to read, and Saheb to listen, and two accomplished dancing-girls to enliven the performance by interludes of music and song. It would indeed be impossible to conceive a more appropriate setting for a poem of Love and Death."—SIR W. W. HUNTER: Acad., xxxv. 67.

Arnold, Matthew, LL.D., D.C.L., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1822–1888, filled the chair of poetry at Oxford from 1857 to 1867, having been re-elected in 1862. He continued to hold the inspectorship of schools, to which he had been appointed in 1851, till 1886, when he retired on a pension. In 1859 he visited France, Germany, and Holland as member of a commission appointed to inquire into the state of education on the Continent; in 1865 he again travelled officially, to report concerning the schools for the middle and upper classes in France and Germany; and shortly before his retirement he made a third visit of inspection to elementary schools on the Continent. He twice visited the United States,—first in 1883, when he delivered three lectures in the principal cities, and again in the summer of 1886, when he read a lecture on the subject of education on the Continent of Europe. His death occurred suddenly, of heart-disease, at Liverpool, on April 15, 1888. He was buried at his birthplace, Laleham, (not Satcham, as erroneously given ante, vol. i.,) near Staines, Middlesex.

Mr. Arnold's position throughout his later years was that of an ethical thinker and teacher, seeking not to construct a system, but to broaden the views and elevate the ideals of the educated classes in respect to literature, politics, religion, and the general scope and interests of life. His lectures at Oxford made a deep impression on his hearers, and as his influence extended to a wider circle it assumed somewhat of an authoritative character, giving rise to the designation often applied to him, of "the apostle of culture." It was, perhaps, the tone, rather than the substance, of his criticism which exercised a strong attraction, not unfelt by those who dissented from his opinions on many important topics. His advocacy of "sweetness and light" could not excite opposition even where it failed to enlist sympathy or exert an inspiring influence; his strictures on the narrowness and crudeness of much of our modern civilization, especially among the English-speaking race, though often expressed with a keen irony, might be combated as partial or defective as regarded insight and appreciation, without provoking resentment or being treated as the utterances of a splenetic and censorious spirit; and his death while his powers were still undiminished occasioned a general sense of loss, as of a voice with a charm peculiar to itself, which had never failed to reach the expectant ear amidst the noisiest discussions.

The following list of Mr. Arnold's publications includes five which are mentioned ante, vol. i. These, though comprised within the period between 1848 and 1857, embrace nearly all his poetical work. They were, however, preceded by two youthful productions, the earlier of which may be said to have been newly discovered.

1. Alaric at Rome: a Prize Poem, recited in Rugby, June xii, M.D.CCC.XL., Rugby, 1840, 8vo, pp. 11. Anon. See a letter from Mr. Edmund Gosse, April 28, 1888, (Athenæum, No. 3157,) who received Mr. Arnold's confirmation of his own suspicion as to the authorship of the poem in these words: "Yes, 'Alaric at Rome' is my Rugby prize poem, and I think it is better than my Oxford one, 'Cromwell,' only you will see that I had been very much reading 'Childe Harold';" and who adds, "The little book is certainly one of the greatest rarities of Victorian poetry. . . . As the work of a boy of seventeen, it is remarkably accomplished, the versification is correct and even vigorous, the thoughts are not unworthy of the subject."

2. Cromwell: a Prize Poem, recited in the Theatre, Oxford, June 28, 1843, Oxford, 1843.

3. The Strayed Reveller, and other Poems, by A., Lon., 1849, cr. 8vo.

4. Empedocles on Etna, and other Poems, by the Author of "The Strayed Reveller," 1853, cr. 8vo. (These two volumes were withdrawn from circulation on the publication of the next, in which selections from them are included, and they have consequently become very rare.)

5. Poems, 1853, fp. 8vo; 2d ed., 1854; 3d ed., 1857.

6. Poems, Second Series, 1854, fp. 8vo.

7. Merope: a Tragedy, 1857, fp. 8vo; 2d ed., 1858.

8. England and the Italian Question, 1859, 8vo.

9. The Popular Education of France, with Notices of that of Holland and Switzerland, 1861, 8vo.

10. On Translating Homer: Three Lectures given at Oxford, 1861, cr. 8vo. See NEWMAN, F. W., infra, and Sat. Rev., xii. 95.

11. Last Words on Translating Homer: a Lecture, 1862, cr. 8vo.

12. A French Eton; or, Middle-Class Education and the State, 1864, cr. 8vo.

13. Essays in Criticism, 1865, fp. 8vo; 2d ed., 1869; 5th ed., 1886.

14. On the Study of Celtic Literature, 1867, 8vo.

15. New Poems, Lon., 1867, cr. 8vo; 2d ed., 1868.

"He is one of the poets who are made, who are not born. He is never impetuous, never ebullient. Nowhere even for a moment are we impressed with a sense of spontaneousness. . . . It is a serious thing for such a mind to get into the distracting eddies of an epoch like ours, the critical hour of a great spiritual and intellectual interregnum. It is a serious thing for a mind not endowed with an ever-flowing fountain of poetic brightness, its own and inextinguishable, to fall among the shadows of a dim-believing age. We may get, as we do get in the present volume, gracious harmony of verse, delicately pensive moods, stately and grave thoughts; but of light and brightness we get too little, and of the cheerful inspiration of poetic joy scarcely any. There are occasional pieces and stanzas which must be excepted from this criticism. . . . Thyrsis is a poem of perfect delight, exquisite in grave tenderness of reminiscence, rich in breadth of western light, and breathing full the spirit of gray and ancient Oxford."—Sat. Rev., xxiv. 319.

"His poetry is not that of a strong original genius, but of a highly impressible, highly cultivated nature. It is the work of a student who has learned the canons of art, who knows how to practise the self-restraint which sometimes almost supplies the place of power,—of one who has thought for himself, has loved good poetry, and who, if not inspired, has frequented the sources of inspiration. His poems are most attractive to those who have a sympathy with the scholarly habit they disclose, and who are fond of indulging themselves in sentiment of a fabric not uncommon in our days, of which the warp is honest manliness, while the woof is a morbid philosophic-sentimental morality."—Nation, v. 228.

16. Schools and Universities on the Continent, 1868, 8vo. See infra, No. 23.

17. Poetical Works, 1869, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. Vol. I., Narrative and Elegiac. Vol. II., Dramatic and Lyric.

18. Culture and Anarchy: an Essay in Political and Social Criticism, 1869, 8vo; 2d ed., 1875; 3d ed., 1882.

"We all of us know pretty well by this time what to think of Mr. Matthew Arnold in his character of social philosopher. . . . Considering how short a time it is since Mr. Arnold came before the public in this character, only some four or five years ago, and considering how much mark he has really made upon English opinion in this interval, there is something curious in the fact that he should already stand in the ranks of the played-out. . . . Mr. Carlyle's objurgations of the times go on kindling a flame in the young mind, while Mr. Arnold's are already beginning to strike on the ear as a very old tune, which was never very much of a tune at any time. . . . His volume of critical essays taught us much. His more recent book on secondary instruction in France and Germany was full of lucid and valuable thoughts about education. His verse is a constant delight. In the present volume there are some wise words, and they will exert their full effect, for Mr. Arnold has got his public; but we cannot detect any sort of usefulness in its general purpose. . . . Why scorn the rough and needful business of the hour, and the men who are content to do it? Unless we are to starve, somebody must thresh the corn. Not at all, says Mr. Arnold; throw away your clumsy, ugly flail, and let us set to work to make a fine steam-machine, which will be in perfect order in twenty years from now. If this is the result of culture, he may well call his book Culture and Anarchy,—culture in the next generation and anarchy meanwhile. Only the anarchy would assuredly advance so much more rapidly that when culture arrived it would find all swept and garnished, and our last state would be ever so much worse than even this present."—Sat. Rev., xxvii. 318.

19. St. Paul and Protestantism: with an Introduction on Puritanism and the Church of England, Lon., 1870, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1871; 3d ed., 1875.

"The book contains much common sense, many acute remarks, and enough eloquence to make it a favourable example of the literary chaos in which we shall be plunged when everybody has all his faculties cultivated at once."—Acad., i. 282.

20. Friendship's Garland: Conversations, Letters, etc., 1871, p. 8vo.

"He seems to us to be committing the blunder of descending to the level of those whom he attacks, or dropping the rapier, which he can use to perfection, for the commonplace cudgel, with which any clown may break his head."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 314.

"It is short, slight, playful: the tone of good-humoured banter is scarcely ever dropped: but for keen, penetrating, and yet just satire on our national faults and weaknesses, social, political, religious, intellectual, there is no book of recent time at all comparable to it. It is perhaps the ablest, it is certainly one of the most characteristic, of Mr. Arnold's political writings."—LORD COLERIDGE: The New Review, i. 224.

21. A Bible Reading for Schools: The Great Prophecy of Israel's Restoration: Isaiah, chapters xl.–lxvi. Arranged and Edited for Young Learners. 1872, 18mo; 4th ed., 1875. See No. 25, infra.

22. Literature and Dogma: an Essay towards a Better Apprehension of the Bible, Lon., 1873; 5th ed., 1877, p. 8vo.

"He speaks of the Bible as a whole with much respect, and without showing the least inclination to sacrifice the Old to the New Testament. . . . We are told that there is undoubtedly in the Old Testament the germ of Christianity, and that the incomparable greatness of the religion founded by Christ came from his having developed it. If we inquire more precisely respecting the nature and contents of this development, Mr. Arnold has a formula in readiness. Jesus, he informs us, had a method, a secret, and an element. The method of Jesus is repentance, involving an appeal to conscience or consciousness, and a life-giving change of the inner man. The secret of Jesus turns on the idea of two lives, one life being connected with the lower and transient self, and the other being full of joy, endurance, and felicity in connection with the higher and permanent life. As repentance is the great word attaching to the method of Jesus, so the key-word of his secret is peace,—peace considered as the result of living to one's real and higher self and dying to one's lower and apparent self. Associated with both the method and the secret of Jesus is the element in which, in Jesus, both method and secret worked. The Greek name of this element is epieikeia; the English, mildness; and Mr. Arnold is careful to tell us that this total stamp of grace and truth, this exquisite conjunction and balance, in an element of mildness, of a method of inwardness perfectly handled and a self-renouncement perfectly kept, was found in Jesus alone. . . . His results, perhaps, are rather more definite in appearance than in fact. . . . The 'method,' and the 'secret,' and the 'element' enable us to regard acknowledged truth in a somewhat new light; but they are not the keys to any special mysteries, and produce clearness mainly by limiting the field of vision."—Sat. Rev., xxxv. 284.

"If its interpretation of the Bible is a true interpretation, it presents, for us at least, a new gospel. If it be a completely untenable interpretation, it is a new and heavy blow at the Bible, for he lends the whole weight of his authority, which both as critic and poet is great, to the assertion that the popular interpretation of the Bible is 'fairy-tale,' or what the Germans call Aberglaube, extra belief, —i.e., imaginative fiction embodying in purely arbitrary forms the essence of the belief."—Spectator, lxvi. 242.

23. Higher Schools and Universities in Germany, 1874, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1882.

"The book on 'Schools and Universities' which I published in 1868 has long been out of print; I now republish that part of it which relates to Germany. The historical interest of tracing the development of the French school-system, from the University of Paris and its colleges down to the lycéums and faculties of the present day, is extremely great; the practical value of this school-system, in affording lessons for English people's guidance at the present moment, is small. The German schools and universities, on the other hand, offer an abundance of such lessons."—Extract from Preface.

24. God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma," 1875, p. 8vo; Popular ed., with new preface, 1884.

"He sees that the Bible must stand by its own inherent value, its adaptation to the higher needs of humanity, not by external evidences. He has put many points relating to the Scriptures in a luminous and persuasive way. Above all, he has recalled modern Christians to the far-reaching words of Jesus,—pushed as they have been into the background by the dogmatic speculations of later ages, —words fitted to bring love, truth, and peace into the heart of humanity, sickened with forms of faith on which it feasts and is not fed: and if we often disagree with him, especially in the dividing process applied to the Fourth Gospel, his illustrations are generally happy, and his side references hit the nail on the head, although sometimes severe."—Ath., No. 2511.

25. Isaiah xl.-lxvi., with the Shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited: with Notes. Lon., 1875, p. 8vo. (This is the same as No. 21, with a different introduction.)

"Both the translation and the notes are models of pure English, and full of suggestiveness to 'young learners.' . . . Mr. Arnold's introduction is full of criticisms involving points of Hebrew scholarship; yet his knowledge of Hebrew is as 'a smoking flax.'"—T. K. Cheyne: Acad., ix. 162.

26. Last Essays on Church and Religion, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo.

"The essays here collected are four in number: 'A Psychological Parallel,' 'Butler and the Zeit-Geist,' 'The Church of England,' and 'A Last Word on the Burials Bill.' They are introduced by a Preface of considerable length and interest, in which Mr. Arnold gives a short review of the position he has taken in his ethical writings, and comments on the comments which that position has excited both at home and abroad."—Ath., No. 2580.

"It must be confessed now, when his work directly concerned with religion is complete, that such work leaves upon the mind of the thoughtful student of religion a feeling of dissatisfaction. . . . Mr. Arnold's religious conservatism consists in part in detaining the devout imagination as near as may be to the things of the past, while he bids the inquiring intellect go forward. . . . We are orphans, and made wards in chancery, but let us call the Court of Chancery 'Our Father,' and the filial emotion will accept the transition more easily."—E. Dowden: Acad., xi. 430.

27. Poetical Works, 1877, 2 vols. cr. 8vo; new ed., 1881. Vol. I., Early Poems, Narrative Poems, and Sonnets. Vol. II., Lyric, Dramatic, and Elegiac Poems. (This edition is called "complete," but it does not include "Merope," or "Lucretius, an Unpublished Tragedy," or some short pieces contained in earlier collections.)

28. Selected Poems, ("Golden Treasury" Series,) 1878, 18mo; 10th ed., 1888. Also, a large-paper ed., 8vo.

29. Johnson's Lives of the Poets. The Six Chief Lives, with Macaulay's Biography of Johnson. Edited, with a Preface. 1878, cr. 8vo; 3d ed., 1881; 4th ed., revised and enlarged.

30. Poems of William Wordsworth. Chosen and Edited. ("Golden Treasury" Series.) 1879, 18mo; 5th ed., 1886.

31. Mixed Essays, 1879, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1880. (Contents: Democracy; Equality; Irish Catholicism and British Liberalism; Porro Unum est Necessarium; A Guide to English Literature; Falkland; A French Critic on Milton; A French Critic on Goethe; George Sand.)

"A good half of this volume is taken up with political discussion; the rest is given to literature. But it is one of the many merits of Mr. Arnold's criticism that he is always and fully conscious of the play and reaction, one upon the other, of the many forces which go to make up civilization, of the influence of literature upon politics and of politics upon literature, and of both upon religion. It is this which distinguishes him from many excellent specialists in criticism, and which gives to his writings a peculiar value."—Sat. Rev., xlvii. 535.

32. Passages from the Prose Writings of Matthew Arnold, 1881, 18mo. I., Literature. II., Politics and Society. III., Philosophy and Religion.

33. Poetry of Byron. Chosen and Arranged. ("Golden Treasury" Series.) 1881, 18mo; large-paper ed., 8vo.

34. Edmund Burke's Letters, Speeches, and Tracts on Irish Affairs. Collected and Arranged: with a Preface. 1881, cr. 8vo.

35. Irish Essays, and Others, Lon., 1882, cr. 8vo.

"The contents of the present volume are sufficiently multifarious. They consist of three essays on Ireland and things Irish, of a couple of addresses delivered to the Ipswich Working Men's College and the Eton Literary Society, of three discourses on 'Copyright,' 'The French Play in London,' and 'The Future of Liberation,' and of the prefaces (1853 and 1854) to the first and second editions of the author's poems. They constitute one of the most readable books imaginable."—Ath., No. 2838.

36. Isaiah of Jerusalem, in the Authorized English Version: with an Introduction, Corrections, and Notes, 1883, cr. 8vo.

37. The Matthew Arnold Birthday Book. Arranged by his Daughter, Eleanor Arnold, [now Hon. Mrs. Wodehouse.] With Photographic Portrait. Lon., 1883, 4to.

38. Works. Uniform Edition. Printed for circulation in America. 10 vols., 1884. Vols. I.-VII., Prose Works. Vols. VIII.-IX., Poetical Works. Vol. X., (added subsequently,) Discourses in America.

39. Poetical Works, 1885, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. I., Early Poems, Narrative Poems, and Sonnets. II., Lyric and Elegiac Poems. III., Dramatic and Later Poems.

40. Discourses in America, Lon., 1885. (Contents: Numbers; Literature and Science; Emerson.)

"In 'Numbers' we have Mr. Arnold's well-known views on democracy stated with a slight difference. . . . 'Literature and Science' speaks for itself. . . . The third paper, again of a different kind, is on 'Emerson.' . . . It is rather destructive of hypothetically erroneous views than (as a real criticism should be) constructive of sound views."—Sat. Rev., lx. 119.

41. Essays in Criticism. Second Series. With an Introductory Note by Lord Coleridge. 1888, cr. 8vo. (Contents: The Study of Poetry; Milton; Thomas Gray; John Keats; Wordsworth; Byron; Shelley; Count Leo Tolstoi; Amiel.)

"The volume contains a number of essays previously published, but not generally known. . . . Those on English subjects are more or less pervaded by the same central idea,—that of distinguishing between the classical and the non-classical, between the true and the false, between the soberly serious and the frivolous or superficial. Here Mr. Arnold is a sure guide. Making all due allowance for his hortatory tendency to iteration, there has been no such keen insight, no such delicate and true taste, no such mastery of style, in our day."—Nation, xlvii. 525.

General Criticism of Matthew Arnold.

I. As a Poet:

"Except . . . in his purely narrative poems, such as the stately and pathetic episodes, 'Sohrab and Rustum' and 'Balder Dead,' Mr. Arnold appears either as a teacher or a learner. He is an academical poet, reflecting the mental attitude of the most cultured minds of his time, and also their obligations to antiquity and such moderns as Wordsworth and Goethe."—Richard Garnett: art. Literature, in The Reign of Queen Victoria, vol. ii. p. 463.

"Mr. Arnold's poems are not exciting; they offer no sudden shock to rouse a worn-out sense; and whoever enjoys them must be either a scholar, taking the term in a large acceptation, or on the way to become one. His strength is not sought from convulsions and tempests; it is not of 'fierce air and violent light' that his image of the world is made. His words are potent in men's minds by steadfastness rather than by mastery, by serenity and not by ardour. He is the companion of the Muses in their solemn and peaceful mood, as they go up, a divine choir following a divine leader, by the moonlit borders of Helicon."—Sat. Rev., xlvi. 565.

"There are in Arnold a vividness in picturesque description, a penetrative imagination, a moral ardour, a sensitiveness to all that is charming in this world,—individual powers and qualities whose results in poetic work are delightful apart from the restless and regretful spirit which infests all his writing. It is undeniable, nevertheless, that the interest of his poetry and much of its value, both in what it teaches and what it reveals, lie mainly in its being the record of the passions, the disappointments and aspirations, the entire life experience, of an open doubter so far as he has intrusted to words what he has seen and felt."—Nation, xxvii. 274.

"One reads them [the poems] for the fiftieth time, and for the fiftieth time one feels inclined to esteem their author for the chief of living poets. It is true that there are faults, and these of a kind which this present age is indisposed to condone. The rhymes are sometimes poor; the movement of the verse is sometimes uncertain, and sometimes slow; the rhythms are always obviously simple in their structure; now and then the intention and effect are cold even to austerity, are bald to the point of uncomeliness. But, on the other hand, how many of the greater qualities of art and inspiration are represented here, and here alone in modern work! There is none of that delight in material for material's sake which is held to be a primary essential in the composition of an artist of the first rank; there is none of that rapture of sound and motion, and none of that efflorescence of expression, which are said to enter largely into the endowment of the true singer. For any of those excesses in technical accomplishment, those ecstasies in the use of words, those effects of sound which are so rich and strange as to impress the hearer with something of the emotion which the process of creation awakened in their author,—for any, indeed, of the characteristic attributes of modern poetry,—one searches here in vain. In matters of form this poet is no romantic, but a classic to the finger-tips. He adores his Shakspeare, but he will none of his Shakspeare's fashions. For him the essentials are dignity of thought and sentiment, and distinction of manner and utterance. It is no aim of his to talk for talking's sake; to express what is but half felt and half understood; to embody vague emotions and nebulous fancies in language that all its richness cannot redeem from the reproach of being nebulous and vague. In his scheme of art there is no place for excess, however magnificent and Shakspearian,—for exuberance, however overpowering and Hugoesque. Human and interesting in themselves, the ideas his verse embodies are completely apprehended; natural in themselves, the experiences it pictures are intimately felt and most thoroughly perceived. They have been resolved into their elements by the operation of a faculty of selection almost Sophoclean, and the effect of their presentation is akin to that of a gallery of Greek marbles. Other poets say anything,—say everything that is in them. Mr. Browning has realized the myth of the Inexhaustible Bottle; Mr. Morris is fluent and copious; Mr. Swinburne has a facility that would seem impossible if it were not a living fact; even the Laureate is sometimes prodigal of unimportant details,—those little foxes that do so terribly spoil the grapes,—of touches insignificant and superfluous, of words for words' sake, of cadences that have no raison d'être save themselves. Mr. Arnold alone says only what is worth saying."—Ath., No. 3017.

"Mr. Matthew Arnold's poetry in great part is an exquisitely delicate and lucid record of the trials of a spirit divided against itself. . . . It was more difficult for him to live steadfastly his true life, the life poetic, since in him the will itself has been attacked by the malady of the age. His various sympathies perplex and entangle him; . . . he yields on this side and recovers himself, yields on that side and recovers himself, and loses by each yielding some of the strength of his soul. He would fain simplify his life by submitting to one dominant set of motives, but he cannot. He admires the trenchant force of will of a hardy nature, but does not see how this can be conjoined with what is dearer to him,—gentleness, tenderness, love. He longs for the release from isolation and self-consciousness which passion and true fellowship with another human being bring, but he cannot quite attain this, and relapses, confessing that love is subject to change, and that each of us must dwell alone. He is swayed by emotions too powerful for him, and to Mr. Arnold, as revealed in his poems, deep feeling, instead of bringing a rapturous calm or a resolved energy of will, brings restlessness and fever. He would fain possess his soul, and would be willing to embrace a cold and barren quietism, for the sake of the calm that accompanies it; but knowledge, and beauty, and culture solicit him with promises too delightful to be disregarded. . . . To Mr. Arnold the contrast between the feverish life and barren toil of man and the serene beauty and large sure operancy of nature becomes at times a reproach, and almost a despair. . . . He turns to Nature for deliverance from the excitement of his own restless feelings, and he sinks into her calms and mild depths, and is for a little time at rest; then a touch, a thought, a nameless nothing, and the trouble of heart and brain begins anew. The dreaming garden trees, the full moon, and the white evening star, the dewy dark obscurity down at the far horizon's rim, the untroubled and unpassionate spaces of the sky, the soft sea breaking at his feet, the lovely mountain-line, the gracious solitude of the hills at dawn, the dimness of the Alpine pine wood, all in nature that consoles and soothes rather than what summons or impels, is that to which Mr. Arnold loves to abandon sense and spirit. Having gained a brief season of refreshment, he again takes up uneasily his burden of a feverish heart and divided will, and endeavors to pursue his way with stoical calm, or, at the lowest, with a pathetic resignation. It is no common spirit which can thus feel and delicately mirror for us the malady of the century. Could he but lose sight of the ideal, his sufferings were at an end. But it is a virtue of Mr. Arnold's poetry that the flying perfect is never out of view; he falters in the pursuit, but the pursuit is never wholly abandoned."—E. Dowden: Victorian Literature, in Transcripts and Studies, pp. 206–208, (Lon., 1888.)

"It is quite too early to assign Matthew Arnold his place in English literature; but doubtless it will fall somewhere between Gray and Wordsworth, showing affinities with each. He will certainly stand far higher than Gray, his workmanship being as perfect and his mind far more affluent in poetical expression. He will fall below Wordsworth only because he wielded no power so massive and so full of inspiration, in spite of having a far clearer consciousness than Wordsworth had of his own aims and the means by which he could attain them. For felicity of phrase Matthew Arnold has few rivals."—Spectator, lxi. 539.

II. As a Critic and Essayist:

"He may not have been a critic of the very first class himself; he may not have directly taught the secret of the best criticism to many or any disciples. But it was partly his fortune, and, to be generous and just at once, still more his merit, to bring criticism before the average Briton as a thing that had to be counted with,—that was not a mere matter of academic rote-learning on one side, of publishers' hack-work on another, of private fear, hatred, and favour on yet a third. . . . The average man could not forget Mr. Arnold, he was too pressing; the average man could not sneer him down, he was too clever. And so he did a really great work in its way quite outside of his poetical work. He established criticism as a recognized literary kind in the reluctant estimation of the very British Philistine himself."—Sat. Rev., lxvi. 589.

"Mr. Arnold has opinions and the courage of them; he has assurance and he has charm; he writes with an engaging clearness. It is very possible to disagree with him; but it is difficult indeed to resist his many graces of manner, and to decline to be entertained, and even interested, by the variety and quality of his matter. . . . The present is a somewhat noisy and affected age; it is given overmuch to clamorous devotion and extravagant repudiation; there is an element of swagger in all its words and ways; it has a love of publicity that is on the whole distressing. Mr. Matthew Arnold's function is to protest against its fashions by his own intellectual practice, and now and then to take his contemporaries to task and to call them to order. He is not particularly original, but he has in an eminent degree the formative capacity, the genius of shaping and development, which is a chief quality of the French mind, and which is not so common among us English as our kindliest critics would have us believe. He takes a handful of golden sentences—things wisely thought and finely said by persons having authority—and spins them into an exquisite prelection; so that his work, with all the finish of art, preserves something of the freshness of those elemental truths on which it is his mission to dilate. . . . He tells the age of its faults, and he suggests to it such remedies as the study of great men's work has suggested to him. If he produces little effect, that is not his fault. He returns to the charge with imperturbable good temper, and repeats his remarks—which are often of the most exasperating kind—with a mixture of mischievousness and charm, of superciliousness and sagacity, and a serene dexterity of phrase, that are unique in modern English letters."—Ath., No. 2838.

"His secret is his subacid reasonableness and his serious levity or frivolous seriousness. What strikes one in his criticisms of life even more than their penetration is their sanity and completeness. Many a controversial victory he has won in discussions about letters or life, or sometimes even in politics, by attending to the one question, What are the actual and complete facts of the case? He takes human nature all round, and sees how far a proposed remedy answers to all its needs. Herein he is really penetrated by the scientific spirit in its best aspect, and he has been no insufficient teacher of the higher anthropology. That in part is the secret of his influence. Men see that what he says tallies in the main with what they know, and at the same time they are half attracted, half repelled, by the tone in which he says it. If we may so put it, he pretends not to be serious, and by the very pretence convinces one of his seriousness. It is, in fact, this seriousness, the conviction his words convey that his deepest concern is with the things of moral import, that gives such authority to his words among Englishmen."—Ath., No. 3009.

"In his prose writings there was discernible an intellectual hauteur which contrasted with the uneasiness and moral incertitude of his versified moods, and which implied that a dogmatist stood erect under the shifting sensitiveness of the poet. A dogmatist,—for Mr. Arnold is not merely a critic who interprets the minds of other men through his sensitiveness and his sympathies; he delivers with authority the conclusions of his intellect; he formulates ideas."—E. Dowden: Victorian Literature, in Transcripts and Studies, p. 209.

"The truth appears to be that Mr. Arnold's own affection for poetry, though intense and not exactly narrow, was strictly limited, having the strangest gaps and flaws, and that he was all his life striving to construct formulæ that would fit in with all his predilections."—Sat. Rev., lxvi. 590.

"It is as a poet, as a master of a prose style unmatched for beauty, delicacy, force, and point, and finally as perhaps the greatest critic of a critical generation, that he has left a deep and lasting mark on our literature."—Nation, xlvii. 526.

"It is in his feeling for pure literature that Matthew Arnold stands alone among the writers of our day. When he descends into the arena of social debate his opinions are but the opinions of one among many thoughtful men. When he takes an historical view he is open to be challenged by many. . . . His literary perception is never at fault, and his verdict is all but infallible. . . . Such is our confidence in Arnold's judgment and discernment in literary things that no one would think of appealing from a ruling of his, even when delivered without its reasons."—Mark Pattison: Acad., xv. 425.

"When all has been said, there is not to be found in modern time such a body of literary criticism as that which Mr. Arnold has left us. In no other writer of our time is there to be found so much strong sense, keen insight, subtle yet lucid analysis, calm unimpassioned judgment, feeling for humour, for pathos, for noble poetry and high imagination, clothed in a style which needed only an occasional rise into the eloquence of passionate and ringing oratory to be quite perfect."—Lord Coleridge: New Review, i. 218.

Arnold, Robert Arthur, b. 1833, son of Robert Coles Arnold, J.P., of Framfield and Maidstone, Eng. He was assistant commissioner under the Public Works Act during the "cotton famine" in Lancashire, 1863–66, and afterwards travelled extensively in the east of Europe, in Africa, and in Asia; was editor of the Echo newspaper from its establishment until 1875; in 1880 was elected member of Parliament for Salford, and in the same year succeeded Sir Charles Dilke as chairman of the Greek Committee, the object of which was to promote the enlargement of the kingdom of Greece in accordance with the suggestions of the Berlin Treaty. Some of his earlier books appeared under the name of "R. Arthur Arnold," but in all later ones the first name is dropped. 1. 7. Social Politics, Lon., 1878, 8vo.

"An important part of the volume . . . is occupied by the discussion of what is known as the Land Question. . . . Mr. Arnold's other essays are upon Disestablishment, Women's Suffrage, the Municipal Government of London, the Liquor Traffic, and other subjects of considerable social and political importance. They are certain to be read with pleasure even when . . . his readers will find something to criticise."—Ath., No. 2669.

8. Free Land, Lon., 1880, p. 8vo. (Advocates abolition of primogeniture, copyhold tenure, and entail, establishment of a system of registration, &c.)

"This book discusses what must shortly be the leading question of the day,—namely, the reform of the laws relating to land. It contains much that is excellent, for Mr. Arnold brings knowledge and intelligent suggestion to bear on the legal and social aspects of the question."—Spectator, liv. 123.

Arnold, Samuel Greene, 1821–1880, b. at Providence, R.I., and educated at Brown University and at Harvard Law School; was admitted to the bar in 1845; was lieutenant-governor of Rhode Island in 1852, in 1861 and in 1862, and in 1863 sat for part of a term in the U.S. Senate. Arnold, William Delafield, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1828–1859, was assistant commissioner in the Punjaub under Sir John Lawrence, who appointed him in 1856 director of public instruction. In 1859 he was forced by ill health to leave India, and died at Gibraltar on his way to England. His wife, Frances Anne, daughter of Major-Gen. Hodson, had died shortly before in India, and their joint memories are celebrated by Matthew Arnold in A Southern Night. In addition to the work mentioned in vol. i., he published a translation of Wiese's Letters on English Education, 1854, and four lectures, treating respectively of the Palace of Westminster, the English in India, Caste, and the Discovery of America, 1855.

Austin, Alfred, b. 1835, at Headingley, near Leeds, Eng.; educated at Stonyhurst College and at St. Mary's College, Oscott; graduated at the University of London 1853, and was called to the bar at the Inner Temple 1857. He has been connected with the London Standard, which he represented at Rome during the sittings of the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican in 1870, and of which he was a special correspondent during the Franco-Prussian war. He has also contributed to the Quarterly Review and other periodicals, and has been the editor of the National Review, an organ of the Conservative party, since its establishment in 1883. 1. Randolph, [poem,] Lon., 1854. Anon. 2. Five Years of it, [a novel,] 1858, 3vols. p. 8vo.

"The characters are distinctly conceived, well discriminated, and consistently maintained. The language is good; and if it seems a little high-flown now and then, we must remember we are reading the history of a poet."—Sat. Rev.

3. The Season: a Satire, 1861, 12mo; 3d ed., rev., 1869. 4. My Satire, and its Censors, [poem,] Lon., 1861. (Afterwards suppressed.)

"The author possesses a certain power of expression; and when he condescends to write naturally and with good-humour, he can produce some very readable couplets. . . . The prime aim of his versification is antithesis, and he dearly loves a good rolling alliteration. One of the most notable and sorest points with Mr. Austin is the present fashion of low dresses as worn by ladies in the evening."—Sat. Rev., xii. 24.

5. The Human Tragedy: a Poem, 1862; new ed., rev., 1876, cr. 8vo.

"Deserves the attention of readers who are interested in the progress of the poetic art in our time, and in the attempt of the author to throw upon recent events the light of poetry. If Mr. Austin has not produced a great poem, he has written a great deal of very beautiful poetry."—Spectator, xlix. 801.

Austin, John, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1790–1859, entered the army at the age of sixteen, but sold his commission five years later, and was called to the bar in 1818. In 1826 he was appointed professor of jurisprudence in University College, London. In 1836 he was sent by the government to Malta to investigate certain alleged grievances of the inhabitants. Constitutional ill health combined with the peculiar tendencies of his mind debarred him from success both in the practice of his profession and as a lecturer; but as a jurist of profound learning and singular powers of elucidation he achieved a high reputation, and was, until recently at least, considered the chief authority on the source and nature of law. His Province of Jurisprudence [ante, vol. i.] was the only work which he published; but his widow collected and edited his Lectures on Jurisprudence, Lon., 1863, 2 vols. 8vo; and a later edition, prepared by Robert Campbell, with the help of notes taken by J. S. Mill, was published in 1869. See AUSTIN, SARAH, infra.

"Ayrton, J. Calder," (Pseud.) See Chapman, Miss Mary Frances, infra.

Ayrton, Mrs. Matilda, (Chaplin,) M.D., 1846–1883, b. at Honfleur, France, began the study of medicine, in 1867, at the London Medical College for Women, but being refused admission, on the ground of her sex, to the highest classes, both in London and Edinburgh, proceeded to Paris in 1871, where the degrees of Bachelier ès Sciences and Bachelier ès Lettres were conferred upon her, and in 1879 the degree of M.D. In the interval she had married, and had spent some years with her husband, William Edward Ayrton, [q. v., infra,] in Japan. Her promising career was cut short by consumption, but she continued her studies to the last. Besides many contributions to periodicals, she published: Child-Life in Japan, and Japanese Child-Stories. Illust. Lon., 1878, r. 8vo; new ed., 1888.

"It might have been made interesting and suggestive to adults, and it would have then been valuable. It might have been made a fascinating child's book, and then it would have been invaluable. To either end more finish was wanted: with the finish wanting, it has attained to neither."—Spectator, li. 1639.

Aytoun, William Edmonstonne, D.C.L., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1813–1865, was appointed in 1852, in recognition of his political writings, sheriff of Orkney. He continued to hold his professorship at Edinburgh and to contribute to Blackwood's Magazine, with which he was always closely connected, and published, in addition to works mentioned in vol. i.: 1. Norman Sinclair, [a novel,] Edin. and Lon., 1861, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"Professor Aytoun is, if not a poet, a man with considerable command of poetic language. He has contributed to one of the most successful collections of parodies in the language, and his short stories have had great success. . . . 'Norman Sinclair' is prosy, rambling, and overloaded with twaddle. . . . But yet it is not without merits of its own.

. . . Professor Aytoun has really given an account of the events of his own time which have most interested him. . . . 'Norman Sinclair' is a Tory manifesto."—Sat. Rev., xii. 670.

Babbage, Charles, M.A., F.R.S., [ante, vol. i., where the year of his birth is incorrectly given as 1790, add.,] 1792–1871, b. near Teignmouth in Devonshire. He devoted thirty-seven years of his life and no inconsiderable part of his fortune to the work of perfecting his famous Calculating Machine, which, however, was never brought to a state of practical efficiency. After his death some fragments of it were deposited in the South Kensington Museum. One calculation made by Babbage, without the aid of his machine, was that one-fourth of his time had been lost through the disturbance occasioned by hand-organs and similar nuisances. Nearly all his numerous publications were contributions to scientific periodicals. A list, comprising forty-seven, is given ante, vol. i., and one of eighty (which includes letters to newspapers, &c.) may be found at the end of his chief subsequent publication,—1. "The work is written with that soldierly respect for high qualities, even among the bitterest antagonists, which is the first characteristic of a good military history."—Sat. Rev., xxvii. 251.

"The interest of the book before us is to be found mainly in the light which it throws on the unsettled question of Grant's soldierly ability, the question how far his brilliant successes were traceable directly to his personal influence, the qualities of his mind and character. . . . It is written in good, plain English, but not with the finish of the practised writer, or any positive charm of style."—Nation, vi. 152.

"They [vols. ii. and iii.] are not only a very full history of the military career of General Grant, but they are the completest and fullest history of our war, during its last year, of which we have any knowledge, or which, it is safe to say, is in existence. . . . They are nowhere dull, and it is not too much to say that they are often intensely interesting. The author had a story of the highest dignity to tell, he possessed exceptional opportunities of knowing it, and he has told it well; and this is true in spite of the fact that these two volumes are almost an apotheosis of Grant, who is credited with every military virtue and with a large share of the other virtues."—Nation, xxxii. 461.

Badger, Rev. George Percy, D.C.L., Knight Commander of the Crown of Italy and Companion of the Gleaming Star of Zanzibar, 1815–1888, b. at Chelmsford, Essex, spent his early life in Malta, where he acquired a perfect knowledge of the Maltese dialect, which he subsequently endeavored to reduce to writing, as a medium of education among the natives. During a two years' residence in Syria he became a proficient in Arabic and made himself familiar with the manners and habits of all classes of the population. Having taken holy orders in 1841, he was sent as a delegate to the Nestorian and other Christian churches of the East, and, while at Nimrûd, made the discovery of a cuneiform slab which led to Layard's explorations. He was afterwards government chaplain at Bombay and at Aden, and in 1857 he rendered important services as Arabic interpreter and staff chaplain in the Persian expedition under Sir James Outram. In 1872 he accompanied Sir Bartle Frere on a special mission to Zanzibar, and some years later was appointed to attend upon the Sultan of Zanzibar during his visit to England. During later years he devoted himself to literary pursuits, especially in connection with his favorite studies, in which he ranks as one of the highest authorities. Besides his contributions to periodical literature, including articles on Egyptian affairs, he has published: 1. The Nestorians and their Rituals: with a Narrative of a Mission to Mesopotamia and Coordistan in 1842–44 and of a Late Visit to those Countries in 1850, Lon., 1852, 2 vols. 8vo. 2. "Only a long residence in the East, frequent intercourse with the best native scholars, and a careful perusal of Arabic newspapers could give a European Orientalist such a command over modern nomenclature and phraseology as Dr. Badger evinces. . . . His book . . . is so superior to any previous attempt in this direction that it bids fair to remain for many generations the standard English-Arabic dictionary."—Ath., No. 2800.

Bagehot, Walter, 1826–1877, b. at Langport, Somersetshire, Eng.; was educated at University College, London, where he graduated in 1846 with the mathematical scholarship, and took his M.A. degree in 1848 with the gold medal in intellectual and moral philosophy and political economy. He was called to the bar in 1852, but instead of practising went into business with his father, a ship-owner and banker at Langport. In his leisure hours he contributed articles on literary and political topics to the Prospective Review, and from 1855 to the National Review, of which he was throughout its existence one of the editors. In 1860 he became editor and manager of The Economist, established by his father-in-law, the Right Hon. James Wilson, as a free-trade organ. As an economist Bagehot belonged to the Ricardo school, though he did not regard the science as a fixed but rather as a tentative one and subject to modifications. He was an authority on questions of banking and finance, and was even more widely known as a literary critic and brilliant talker. 1. Estimates of some Englishmen and Scotchmen, Lon.,

"Mr. Bagwell has evidently had on his side time, means, impartiality, the rare and valuable gift of sympathy which is almost necessarily lacking to Englishmen who are called upon to deal with this inseparable nuisance of their Empire, the knowledge which no foreigner can have, and the want of which leads the best-informed foreigners into such ludicrous mistakes. . . . To everybody who wants a trustworthy summary, easy of consultation, of a period of Irish history, his book will be most valuable. . . . But it is lacking in the instructive qualities of history. . . . The reader finds himself constantly lost in a wilderness of details, with only the remotest idea of what Mr. Bagwell is endeavouring to show by means of these details."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 239.

Bain, Alexander, M.A., LL.D., b. 1818, at Aberdeen, and educated at Marischal College in that place. He has held the following appointments: professor of natural philosophy in the Andersonian University, Glasgow, during 1845; assistant secretary to the metropolitan sanitary commissioners 1847; assistant secretary to the general board of health 1848–50; examiner in logic and moral philosophy in the University of London 1857–62 and 1864–69; examiner in moral science at the India civil service examinations in 1858 and several other years; professor of logic in the University of Aberdeen 1860–80, and in 1881 he was elected lord rector of that university. He began his literary career in 1840, as a contributor to the Westminster Review, and wrote several text-books on natural philosophy for a series published by Messrs. Chambers. 1. The Senses and the Intellect, Lon., 1855; 3d ed., 1868.

"What Mr. Mill accomplished for Logic, Mr. Bain has essayed to perform for Psychology,—namely, to reconstruct it on a natural basis. . . . His volume presents us with a vast accumulation of phenomena, classified and arranged as the basis of his theories. . . . We can hardly open a page without lighting on some fact attractive to any one who feels an interest in these subjects."—Sat. Rev.

2. The Emotions and the Will, Lon., 1859; 3d ed., 1875. 3. On the Study of Character: with an Estimate of Phrenology, Lon., 1861.

"Mr. Bain cannot be a reader of the novelists and moralists of his time, or he would hardly have said that the interest in the 'analytical study of human character' was 'declining.' . . . Mr. Bain agrees with the Phrenologists in regarding the brain as the organ of the mind and in tracing the differences of character to constitutional differences in the qualities of the various nerve-centres. . . . But he lays out his ground for the analysis of character differently."—Sat. Rev., xiii. 18.

Baird, Rev. Henry Martyn, D.D., LL.D., son of Rev. Robert Baird, b. 1832, in Philadelphia; graduated at the University of the City of New York (Presbyterian) in 1850; studied at the University of Athens, in Greece, and at Union and Princeton Theological Seminaries; was a tutor at Princeton College from 1855 to 1859, and in the latter year became professor of Greek in his alma mater. He has published: 1. Modern Greece: Narrative of a Residence and Travels: with Observations on its Antiquities, Literature, Language, Politics, and Religion, N. York, 1856, 12mo. 2. Life of Robert Baird, D.D., N. York, 1865, 8vo. 3. History of the Rise of the Huguenots of France, N. York, 1879, 2 vols. 8vo; new ed., 1883.

"Looking for a word with which to characterize Professor Baird's work, we are tempted to use neatness. . . . To find the results of clean, scholar-like investigation expressed in a lucid, consecutive, and sober narrative gives a sense of positive satisfaction to the critical reader which the finest of fine writing is powerless to bestow. . . . Opportunities . . . of bringing the very act and deed of his characters before the reader are too often rejected by our author in favor of some mild generality. It is through this failure on points of detail, and through an overstrained sobriety of tone, quite misplaced in telling of the fiercest tragedy of modern times, that The Rise of the Huguenots comes short of being a really great history."—Nation, xxx. 47.

"He is a faithful, if a somewhat partial, chronicler of all the main events which lie between the famous 'Bath of Blood' at Vassy, with the consequent outbreak of the first civil war, and the St. Bartholomew Massacre, and he tells his story so well that he cannot fail to interest the reader."—Sat. Rev., xlix. 634.

4. The Huguenots and Henry of Navarre. With Maps. N. York, 1886, 2 vols. 8vo.

"If his narrative never reaches the greatest excellence, so on the other hand it never falls below a very high standard. His style is very clear and correct; his preparation is conscientious and thorough; he possesses great skill in the selection and arrangement of his material, and he has given us a thoroughly interesting and valuable work."—Nation, xliv. 433.

"The only defect of any consequence to be noted in the work is one which does not detract from its interest as a narrative, but seriously affects its value as a history. . . . He treats the civil conflicts, which he describes as purely religious wars, whereas it is evident from the facts which he records—more evident perhaps than in any previous history—that they were mainly political, and that religion was little more than a pretext."—Critic, v. 52.

"He is accurate, well informed, and appears to have made good use of the abundant materials which exist in print for the history of France during the sixteenth century. . . . Mr. Baird is too much of a partisan, and too indiscriminating in the use of his materials, for his work, excellent as it is, to take its place as the standard and final history of the French Reformation."—P. Baird, Spencer Fullerton, LL.D., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1823–1887, was educated at Dickinson College, where he afterwards became professor of natural science. On the death of Prof. Henry of the Smithsonian Institution in 1878, Prof. Baird succeeded him as secretary. In 1871 he was appointed by the President U.S. Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, for the purpose of inquiring into the causes of the decrease of food-fishes in the country and the best means of restoring them. He furnished for some years a yearly report of the advances made in science. Also: 1. Reports of the U.S. Fish Commission, 1873–1886, 12 parts. 2. "These authors have unusual facilities for preparing an exhaustive treatise,—opportunities which, as leading ornithologists of the day, they cannot but use to the best advantage. . . . They have prepared a work marking an advance in the history of the science as decided as that accomplished by Audubon in his day. The work at once becomes the authority upon the subject; while the circumstance that it embodies the results of an activity in the field of research which has left comparatively little to be learned of our birds, renders it probable that it will never be superseded,—at least as long as present methods of ornithological study endure."—Nation, xviii. 270.

12. The Water Birds of North America, 1884, 2 vols. 4to.

"The work will . . . mark an era in the literature of American ornithology; to the specialist it will form for many years a vade-mecum of the subject, and to the general reader and the amateur a boon the value of which cannot be easily over-estimated."—Nation, xl. 17.

"The two handsome volumes before us, profusely illustrated with the most thrilling pictures of adventures with hippopotami and battles with natives, contain the record of more than three years' operations by Sir Samuel Baker and his followers in the basin of the Upper Nile. The book is not uninteresting as a record of travel. . . . However, the traveller is but a secondary character. . . . It is the account, by the commander himself, of a military expedition. . . . And yet the book is perhaps less interesting as a military narrative than from the light which it throws upon the condition of a part of Central Africa which has long possessed a peculiar interest, and which is now being gradually annexed to the civilized world."—*Sat. "He attempts, not without considerable success, to prove that the fundamental assumptions of science have no more claims to rationality than those of theology. . . . His book is an able and refreshing contribution to one of the burning questions of the age."—Ath., No. 2709.

"His investigation of the initial assumptions of science shows that the least questionable may be questioned. But his negative aim is limited to a disproof of any special inviolability in those decisions which our generation considers specially certain, and the result seems to us a plea less for doubt of any kind than for the validity of those beliefs which are self-justified, and apart from which we can justify no other."—Spectator, liii. 459.

"Mr. Balfour's main argument, directed nominally against Positivists, but really applicable not only to that feeble sect, but to the whole of that agnostic Humanitarian Church which begins to number its tens of thousands of disciples, to proclaim itself the creed of the future, and to assume, while waiting for the Millennium, the airs of a dominant faith, is that it does not fulfil its first promise and does not provide a sufficient provocation to unselfish action."—Spectator, lxi. 1354.

Balfour, Mrs. Clara Lucas, (Liddell,) 1808–1878, b. in the New Forest, Hampshire, Eng. On the death of her father in her childhood she removed to London with her mother, and in 1827 married Mr. James Balfour of the Ways and Means Office in the House of Commons, and resided in Chelsea, London, where she formed a friendship with Mrs. Carlyle. In 1841 Mrs. Balfour began to write and lecture on temperance, and for nearly thirty years devoted herself mainly to that cause. She also lectured on topics relating to the position of women, and for some years was lecturer on literature at a school in London. Her stories and other publications were very numerous and have had an immense sale. 1. Moral Heroism; or, The Trials and Triumphs of the Great and Good, Lon., 1846; new ed., illust., 1877, p. 8vo. 2. 2. A Treatise on Comparative Embryology. Illust. Lon., 1880–81, 2 vols. 8vo; new ed., 1885.

"A work so voluminous, so difficult, and written in strictly technical language, must of necessity appeal to a very narrow circle of readers. In fact, it is so far in advance of the present state of science that much time must of necessity elapse before it can be thoroughly understood. We are glad, however, to find various indications that its value as a standard work is being already recognized."—Sat. Rev., lii. 609.

Ball, John, F.R.S., M.R.I.A., 1818–1889, eldest son of the Right Hon. Nicholas Ball, b. in Dublin, and educated at Oscott College and at Christ's College, Cambridge; was called to the Irish bar, but never practised; appointed a poor law commissioner in Ireland in 1846, and again in 1849; elected member of Parliament for the county of Carlow in 1852; appointed under-secretary for the colonies in 1855; and being defeated in the general election of 1858, when he was a candidate for the borough of Limerick, retired from politics and devoted himself to scientific pursuits, especially botany. He travelled extensively, especially in the countries around the Mediterranean and in North and South America, was a prominent member of the Alpine Club, and contributed many papers to the publications of learned societies, including Spicilegium Floræ Moroccanæ and Origin of the Flora of the European Alps. He was joint author with Sir J. D. Hooker [q. v.] of a work on Morocco, and editor of Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers: a Series of Excursions by Members of the Alpine Club, Lon., 1859. "Its merits are of an order very inferior to what they might have been. . . . It is the seamy side of life's tapestry that is chiefly exhibited. . . . Many persons connected with public life, with the professions of the law, literature, and the stage, whom Serjeant Ballantine did know, and many whom he did not know, are mentioned; and his book is entertaining enough, although it is ill written, slovenly, and full of much that must unfortunately make the judicious grieve."—*Sat. "It is so ill written and so carelessly put together that it can hardly be said to belong to literature at all. The first judgment of most readers must be unfavourable; but as they go along the author's frankness and easy good nature will please them and help to atone for the great defects of arrangement and of style. . . . There are plenty of good anecdotes scattered about the book."—Ath., No. 2841.

2. From the Old World to the New: being some Experiences of a Recent Visit to America, including a Trip to the Mormon Country, Lon., 1884, 8vo.

"He terms this volume a 'continuation' of his 'Experiences;' 'the dregs' of his 'Experiences' may seem a harsh, but it is a more accurate, title. In that portion of his volume which deals with the Old World he has hardly a good story to tell. . . . We do not find in the American section of his book a single sentence worth quoting."—Spectator, lvii. 1740.

Ballantyne, Archibald. The Life of John, Second Baron Carteret (afterwards Earl Granville,) 1690–1763: a Political Biography, Lon., 1887, 8vo.

"The biographer has failed to take advantage of his great opportunity. He has collected his facts with praiseworthy care; he has gone to new and unpublished sources of information; his accuracy is no less commendable than his industry; but, in spite of these merits, the volume remains dull. It is a conscientious piece of historical work, rather than an effective study of Carteret. . . . On the other hand, the Life of Carteret deserves to be read not only as a careful study, but as the first continuous narrative, so far as we know, of the career of a most fascinating character."—Ath., No. 3129.

Bamford, Samuel, 1788–1872, b. at Middleton, Lancashire, was the son of a weaver, and followed the same trade in early life, but, having been educated at a grammar-school, he acquired a taste for literature and wrote songs that became very popular with the laboring classes of Manchester. The part which he took as a leader in some of the combinations of workingmen which were common in the early part of the present century gave him great notoriety, and led to his arrest and imprisonment on what appears to have been a groundless charge of treason. About 1826 he became correspondent of a London newspaper, and in later life he held a small appointment under government. 1. He was recalled at his own request in 1874, and afterwards resided in Washington. His History of the United States, of which vols. i. to vi. are elaborately noticed ante, vol. i., was completed in 10 vols., Bost., 1840–74. A revised edition, in 6 vols., was issued in 1876, and another, with the author's last revision, in 1883–84. His other publications, not mentioned in vol. i., include orations, addresses, and pamphlets, the most important being: 1. Memorial Address on the Life and Character of Abraham Lincoln, delivered at the Request of Both Houses of Congress, Washington, 1866. 2. Joseph Reed: a Historical Essay, N. York, 1867. 3. A Plea for the Constitution of the United States of America, wounded in the House of its Guardians, N. York, 1886. He has also published: 4. History of the Formation of the Constitution of the United States of America, N. York, 1882, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The story of the formation of the Constitution is so well known, and has been so often told, that Mr. Bancroft could, in the nature of things, add very little to it. Facts and documents may be accumulated,—and he has shown great industry in this part of his work,—but they do not substantially affect the conclusions which must be reached on the main points. The book is chiefly valuable as a full and connected narrative of the adoption of the Constitution, not only by the Convention, but by the different States. It contains absolutely no original discussion; in fact, Mr. Bancroft's historical system almost precludes anything of the kind. History is with him a chronicle of events associated with and caused by distinguished men. His natural taste is for the picturesque and dramatic, as the excesses of his style amply show; and this disposition of his mind diverts him from the discussion of the growth and development of principles of constitutional law."—Nation, xxxiv. 524.

Bancroft, Hubert Howe, b. 1832, at Granville, Ohio, was for some years employed in a book-store in Buffalo, N.Y., and in 1852 went to San Francisco and established a publishing house, from which he retired in 1868 in order to devote himself, with the aid of a corps of collaborateurs, to the completion and arrangement of a great historical collection, including printed books, manuscripts, maps, &c., and to the preparation of a series of works based on this material and intended to embrace the history of the whole Pacific coast on an elaborate scale. 1. The Native Races of the Pacific States. Vol. I., Wild Tribes. Vol. II., Civilized Nations of Mexico and Central America. Vol. III., Mythology and Languages of both Savage and Civilized Nations. Vol. IV., Antiquities and Architectural Remains. Vol. V., Aboriginal History and Migration: with Index. N. York, 1875, 5 vols. 8vo.

"Never was a large library more thoroughly ransacked or more completely laid under tribute by a writer than was Mr. Bancroft's collection of 'Americana' in the preparation of this work. Although partly historical, the book could not properly be called a history; it is rather an ethnological treatise. But ethnology is a broad and complex science, and the author's plan involves several distinct surveys of the entire field. He traverses it first ethnographically; that is, he describes the various races in their characteristic features, just as they appeared to Europeans when first visited. He goes over it a second time, to give an account of the religion of these races; his third survey of the field has reference to their various languages; and the fourth to their antiquities, especially their architectural remains. This is followed by another exploration, in which he gathers together whatever is known of their migrations and their primitive history."—Nation, xxi. 182.

"He has raised his Pacific district into higher importance in the educated world, and every one appreciates his work. By making accessible so much valuable material, and sweeping away so much accumulated rubbish, he has made a great move toward the production of a real system of American anthropology."—EDWARD B. TYLOR: Acad., x. 192.

2. History of the Pacific States of North America, San Fran., 8vo. Vols. I.–III., Central America, (1516–1887,) 1883–87. History of Central America, vol. i., 1882.

"We cannot express too strongly our admiration for the man who has seriously taken in hand such an unprecedented task. With no special preparation or aptitude for this work, and with merely the training which a successful career in business had given him, he has manifested such a love of knowledge for its own sake, such a spirit of self-sacrifice for the future benefit of the community in which he has lived and accumulated his fortune, such energy and pluck and persistency, as justly entitle him to the respect and gratitude of his contemporaries, and insure his perpetual remembrance by posterity. Single-handed he has attempted and accomplished a feat which the oldest historical society in the land, with its lifetime of nearly a century, and its membership embracing the most scholarly and industrious workers of each generation, would be proud to have achieved. Alone he has amassed the library, gathered the manuscript material, and erected the building to preserve for posterity the muniments of the history of a large section of our common country. But all this public spirit and energy, with all its attendant success, do not necessarily afford any assurance of his fitness for the task of writing history; and we believe he will never find an imitator of his truly original device of seeing with other men's eyes, and thinking with other men's minds, as a special preparation for historical investigation."—Nation, xxxvi. 85.

Vols. IV.–VI., Mexico, (1516–1803), 1883, vols. i.–iii., 8vo. Vols. VII.–VIII., Mexico, (1804–1861), vols. iv.–v. Vol. IX., Mexico, 1888, vol. vi. Vol. X., North American States and Texas, (1531–1800), vol. i., 1883. Vols. XII.–XIV., California, (1542–1824), 1884–85, vols. i.–ii. Vols. XV.–XVIII., California, (1825–1859), 1885–88, vols. iii.–vi.

"The history of early California has been written in great detail, and in a fashion that must make the book readable only in single chapters as episodes—never as one connected whole. Yet nowhere else can we find so thorough an account of the beginning of an important community. . . . No one can doubt that the Pacific States have a very significant history before them. In the future, near or remote, no sensible man will doubt the value of the elaborate research which has now made the early portions of this history both accessible and comprehensible for all time."—Nation, xliv. 39.

Bancroft, Marie Effie, (Wilton,) b. at Doncaster, and Bancroft, Squire, b. 1841, in London, married 1867, were for some years managers of the Prince of Wales's Theatre, and subsequently of the Haymarket Theatre, and also the principal performers in the comedies produced at those houses. They retired from the management in 1885. Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft on and off the Stage. Written by Themselves. Lon., 1888, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Gossip concerning players, playwrights, and playhouses is nearly always entertaining, and there is plenty of readable matter in these volumes. They tell pleasantly, and for the most part modestly, so much as the authors care that the public should hear about them, and they put on record a good deal that is worth knowing about stage history and its connections during the past quarter of a century. . . . As a rule, the brightest passages are those supplied by Mrs. Bancroft."—Ath., No. 3156.

Barbé, Louis A. The Tragedy of Gowrie House: an Historical Study, Paisley and Lon., 1887, 4to.

"Whether this new account of the mysterious 'conspiracy' against the life of James VI. of Scotland, which ended in the death of the Earl of Gowrie and his brother, the Master of Ruthven, and which has led to almost as much controversy as the authorship of the 'Junius' letters or the identity of the Man in the Iron Mask, is, in the conclusions which it hints rather than openly states, a sound one or not, it is a masterly marshalling of evidence."—Spectator, lxi. 20.

"The whole drift of the 'Study' is to fasten on the king a charge of deliberately plotting the death of the Ruthvens and fabricating a story to make it appear that they were slain in self-defence. An impartial examination of the character and actions of James will not bear out such a contention."—T. W. Cameron: Historical Review, No. 12.

Barham, Francis Foster-, [see Barham, Francis, ante, vol. i., add.,] 1808–1871; brother of T. F. Barham, infra, b. near Penzance, Cornwall. He became an attorney, but was prevented by ill health from practising law, and began to write for the periodicals. He founded a new form of religion, which he called "Alism;" in his own words, "a name derived from A, Al, or Alah, the most ancient and universal title of Deity in the Hebrew Scripture. By Alism I therefore mean that eternal divinity, pure and universal, which includes and reconciles all divine truths whatsoever to be found in scripture or nature, in theology, theosophy, philosophy, science, and art." He left behind him a mass of closely-written manuscript weighing 116 pounds. The following list of his publications includes the three which are mentioned ante, vol. i.: 1. Barnes, Rev. William, D.D., 1820–1886, b. in the vale of Blackmore, Dorset, Eng., kept a school at Dorchester for a time, but in 1847 was ordained and became curate of Whitcombe, and in 1862 rector of Winterbourne-Came. He made a close study of the Dorsetshire dialect and early English history and language. He was also an Oriental linguist. He published several important philological works, his philological grammar being formed by a comparison of more than sixty languages, but he is best known as the poet of Dorsetshire rural life. "It may deal a blow at some of the blunders and absurdities of modern English speech. . . . We may commend Mr. Barnes's book to the reader as one in which he will find much to instruct, much to irritate, and not a little to amuse him."—Sat. Rev., xlvi. 285.

16. Poems of Rural Life in the Dorset Dialect, (First–Third Collection,) Lon., 1879, p. 8vo.

"Mr. Barnes is unquestionably the greatest English pastoral poet; for Wordsworth comes under a different category. Such a power of painting Dorsetshire scenery as he commands can only come of a deep love of it. Hence the sweet air of Southern England blows through every stanza he writes. . . . Mr. Barnes is a master of rustic dialogue."—Ath., No. 2700.

"Students who belong to a more vigorous school may, no doubt, often find reason to smile at his ingenious and erratic speculations; but . . . his quaintly-worded writings on 'speech-lore' nevertheless contain an abundance of original and valuable suggestion to which even scientific philologists may sometimes do well to take heed. . . . It is to be regretted that the venerable author has been unable himself to revise his book for the press. . . . Although, however, this glossary appears in so fragmentary and unfinished a shape, there are few books of the kind that greatly surpass it in interest. The Dorset dialect is in itself exceptionally worthy of attention. It is probably the purest existing descendant of the West-Saxon speech of Alfred."—HENRY BRADLEY: Acad., xxix. 214.

Physical Metempiric: with Memoir by his Widow, and an Appendix containing Three Articles reprinted from "Mind," Lon., 1883, 8vo.

"It is a paradise of paradox, laid out in the English taste by a powerful intellect sibi permissus,—that is to say, unhampered by the exigencies of the analytical method. It marshals a host of consequences flowing from the assumption that consciousness is immediately known as agency. Its value is the value inherent in the systematic and conscientious labour of a logical mind, employed upon the highest and largest problems of thought."—SHADWORTH H. HODGSON: Acad., xxiii. 404.

"This is the work of an ingenious but somewhat fanciful mind. It professes to deal with what philosophers call the 'noumenal' world—the unknown cause of the phenomenal—upon principles analogous to the atomic theory of physics. The only 'noumenon,' or 'thing-in-itself,' with which we are acquainted is our own consciousness, and so the author supposes every atom which is, physically considered, a centre of force and movement, to be 'noumenally'—that is, in itself, or 'metempirically,' as he calls it—a centre of consciousness."—Spectator, lvii. 161.

Privately printed at the Chiswick Press. The ordinary edition consists of about 500 copies, and the large-paper ed. of 250 copies.

"The list of authorities which stands at the head of M. Barrère's preface, though ample on the French side, is meagre and ill chosen enough on the English. . . . Of English slang, other than that of 'Arry and the criminal classes, M. Barrère has a very rudimentary knowledge. . . . There are obvious reasons why a Frenchman should find it hard to appreciate forms of language which have grown out of our system of education. With these allowances, he has performed his work with great patience and industry, and with an accuracy, if we may say so without offence, surprising in one of a race who, as a rule, do not take the trouble to be correct in their dealings with any foreign tongue."—Spectator, lxi. 1197.

"Hardly any of its words do not belong to the vocabulary of the prison or the brothel, and the impression which it leaves upon the mind is that argot, in spite of Charles Nodier's eulogy, is a very dreary and a very limited tongue."—Sat. Rev., lxvi. 718.

Barrie, James Matthew, M.A., b. 1860, at Kirriemuir, Forfarshire, Scotland, and educated at Edinburgh University, has devoted himself to literature and journalism, contributing to the St. James's Gazette, the Scotsman, and other journals. Kirriemuir, where he still resides, is the "Thrums" of his Auld Lichts Idylls. 1. Better Dead, [a story,] Lon., 1887. 2. Auld Lichts Idylls, Lon., 1888, p. 8vo. (Contains sketches descriptive of life in a Scotch village.)

"This is not only the best book dealing exclusively with Scotch humble life, but the only book of the kind deserving to be classed as literature that has been published for at least a quarter of a century. . . . It is written in a style of clear, direct English, devoid of affectation and unmarred by self-consciousness, but which, every tenth page or so, leads the reader into some ambuscade of what looks like quaintness, but is only realism touched with humour. . . . His success in toning down the harshness of the world he depicts lies in the tenderness which mingles with his humour."—William Wallace: Acad., xxxiii. 354.

3. When a Man's Single: a Tale of Literary Life in London, Lon., 1888, p. 8vo.

He was dean of the faculty of medicine in University College from 1874 to 1876, and examiner in medicine to the Queen's University in Ireland from 1876 to 1879. Besides the works on which his reputation as a physiologist chiefly rests, and some of which attracted wide attention and led to public controversy by their advocacy of the doctrine of abiogenesis, (or the spontaneous generation of life,) he has contributed numerous papers to medical and scientific publications, the most important being Memoirs on Nematoids, Parasitic and Free, (in the Philosophical Transactions and the Transactions of the Linnæan Society;) a monograph on the Anguillulidæ, in which he described 100 new species discovered by himself; and all the articles on Diseases of the Spinal Cord, with many on Diseases of the Nervous System, in Quain's Dictionary of Medicine. 1. The Modes of Origin of the Lowest Organisms, including a Discussion of the Experiments of M. Pasteur, and a Reply to some Statements by Professors Huxley and Tyndall, Lon., 1871, p. 8vo.

"Whatever the ultimate verdict of science may be on the vexed question of the possibility of what is called spontaneous generation, the controversy will certainly not languish for want of experiments or of arguments upon them. . . . Dr. Bastian's book is an attempt . . . to disprove the overstrained inferences which have been drawn from Pasteur's remarkable negative results."—Sat. Rev., xxxii. 152.

2. The Beginnings of Life; being some Account of the Nature, Modes of Origin, and Transformations of Lower Organisms. Illust. Lon., 1872, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"A work which in the startling character of its revelations is the most remarkable that has appeared since Mr. Darwin took the scientific world by storm with his Origin of Species. . . . His experiments have followed three main lines of investigation. One class of observations is directed to the investigation of the transformations which matter actually living or taken direct from a living organism may undergo. A second class deals with the evolution of life from the débris of formerly living plants or animals. A third class is directed to the inquiry whether life can be developed from matter containing the organic elements, after it has been reduced to a crystalline form. . . . He does not profess to have proved that life can be evolved out of crystalline solutions, though he does not disguise his own expectation that when the subject is more fully worked out this also will have to be recognized as an established fact."—*Sat. "It cannot be regarded in any sense as a popular work, but rather as the fullest scientific exposition yet published of the views held on the subject of psychology by the advanced physiological school. It teems with new and suggestive ideas."—Ath., No. 2749.

"Mr. Bates . . . resided during eleven years within four degrees of the equator, sent home nearly fifteen thousand species, eight thousand of which were new to science, and has now published an account of his travels and adventures, distinguished by a manly simplicity, an entire absence of book-making, and a rich collection of suggestive facts. The work is meant only for readers of natural history, but they will be very grateful for it. Marvels and novelties will arrest them in every chapter. . . . Mr. Bates is a philosophical naturalist, and not merely a hunter of species. . . . He is always on the track of general principles, and, thus guided, many of his observations have a distant reach."—Sat. Rev., xv. 800.

"For eight months in 1871-72 the author, a Quaker school-teacher, taught Caddo children at the Wichita Agency in the Indian Territory, when, under a powerful impulse, he conceived it his duty to go among the Kiowas. . . . With these people he remained as his health permitted, until he entirely broke down in the summer of 1874; and the diary of his nomadic life is the soul of this volume. . . . It may be commended as a plain statement of some things that pertain to barbarian camps existing at this moment in the heart of our country, and as corroborative evidence that a consistent and rational policy of peace is not so absurd and puerile as the white savages of the frontier insist."—Nation, xxii. 50.

Bayne, Peter, M.A., LL.D., [ante, vol. i., where the designation of "Rev." is prefixed, it would seem incorrectly, to Mr. Bayne's name; add.,] the son of a minister of the Church of Scotland, was born at Fodderty, in Ross-shire, and graduated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, winning prizes for a poem and a prose essay. He was editor successively of the Glasgow Commonwealth, the Edinburgh Witness, and the Dial and the Weekly Review, published in London; and has contributed numerous articles, mainly critical and philosophical, to the Contemporary, Fortnightly, British Quarterly, and London Quarterly Reviews, and to Fraser's and other magazines. Many of these have been republished, and are included in the subjoined list: 1. The Testimony of Christ to Christianity, Lon., 1862, 8vo. 2. Beal, Rev. Samuel, D.C.L., b. 1825, at Devonport, Eng., was educated at the Plymouth Grammar-School and at the Devonport Classical and Mathematical School, whence he proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was elected on the Foundation, and graduated B.A. in 1846. He was for some time head-master of Bramham College, but resigned that position, took orders in the Church of England, and, after holding two curacies, was appointed a chaplain in the royal navy, becoming in addition a naval instructor. In 1853 he went in H.M.S. Sybille to China, where he acquired a knowledge of the language. During the early part of the Chinese war (1857–60) he was employed by Admiral Sir Michael Seymour as interpreter, and was present at various engagements in the Canton River, and at the bombardment and capture of Canton, being gazetted for his services. In 1857 he returned to England, where he held various appointments in the gift of the Admiralty. He was made rector successively of Falstone (1877) and of Wark (1880), both in Northumberland, and in 1888 became rector of Greens-Norton, Northampton. He is professor of Chinese in University College, London, an active member of the Royal Asiatic Society, corresponding member of the Peking Oriental Society, and member of various learned societies in France. Besides many papers contributed to the Transactions of various learned societies, he has published: 1. Who is the Emperor of Japan? (A tract printed for private circulation in 1857, to show that the Shôgûn was not the Emperor of Japan.) 2. Account of the Shwui-Lui, or Torpedo, used by the Chinese in the War of 1842–43, and also during the War of 1857–58. (The account is translated from the well-known work called Hae-kwŏ-t'u-chi. The machine is stated to be the invention of an American called John Lewis, and sold to one of the Hong merchants for several thousand dollars.) 3. Catalogue of the Buddhist Tripitka as it is known in China and Japan. "His lectures are evidently the result of wide reading and mature reflection, expressed in clear and often singularly felicitous language. . . . On the other hand, there are many to whom his treatment will appear to labour under two grave defects,—an inadequate, not to say erroneous, exposition of the causes to which the Reformation is mainly attributable, and a far too partial estimate of the claims of its chief authors to be regarded as in any way in sympathy with 'modern thought.'"—J. The Life and Correspondence of Samuel Johnson, D.D., Missionary of the Church of England in Connecticut, and First President of King's College, New York, N. York, 1874, 8vo.

"Few great men wait a hundred years for a biographer. The American Dr. Johnson has been fortunate in waiting thus long, and his biographer has been doubly fortunate in the use of materials which give his work the fulness of contemporaneous history, and in the skill and tact he possesses for weaving them into a lively and absorbing narrative."—Nation, xviii. 109.

Beecher, Rev. Henry Ward, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1813–1887. Mr. Beecher was one of the founders of the New York Independent, to which for nearly twenty years he contributed editorials, signed with an asterisk, whence the title of Star Papers, under which they were reprinted. From 1861 till 1863 he was editor-in-chief of the Independent. He was an early and strong protester against slavery, and during the civil war went abroad and addressed large audiences in the principal cities of Great Britain on the issues involved in the war. In April, 1865, at the request of the government, he delivered an oration at Fort Sumter on the anniversary of its fall. In 1874 he was defendant in an action brought by Theodore Tilton, which resulted in a disagreement of the jury, and in 1886 he made a second lecturing tour in England. From 1859, Mr. Beecher's sermons were taken down by stenographers, and printed for many years in the shape of a weekly publication called the Plymouth Pulpit. 1. Pleasant Talk about Fruits, Flowers, and Farming, 1860; new ed., 1873, 12mo. 2. Eyes and Ears, Bost., 1862, 12mo. 3. "Norwood as a novel . . . a man is to be blamed for liking; unless indeed he has formed a habit of liking Norwoods. And as a picture of 'Village Life in New England' . . . it seems to us also open to exception. . . . As a gallery of Yankee portraits—portraits, at any rate, of Yankees of the period when Mr. Beecher and we were younger than we are now—Norwood appears to us a success."—Nation, vi. 274.

10. Sermons: Selected from Published and Unpublished Documents, and revised by their Author, N. York, 1868, 2 vols. 8vo.

"People . . . will find in them what are clearly true statements of a true man's deepest convictions, lightened up and all on fire,—which in their mere language are spoken in the dialect of to-day, and in their poetry are illustrated from to-day's keen and cheerful observations. They will not convince sceptics, they will not be read at all by the Gradgrinds; but, for all that, they will make a great many good people better, a great many cheerful people more cheerful, and to a great many puzzled people they will explain intricacies in life which, unexplained, might make life a failure."—Nation, viii. 174.

"In the first two of these essays Mr. Beesly affirms that Catiline and Clodius were leaders of the democratic party in Rome, and that they owe the bad reputation which they have in history to the inventive malice of their political enemies. In the third he narrates the actions of Tiberius in such a way as to present him as a faultless character. . . . Mr. Beesly is not entirely original in the propositions which he affirms. . . But Mr. Beesly is singular in the intensity of his opinions."—Ath., No. 2643.

Beke, Charles Tilstone, Ph.D., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1800–1874, b. at Stepney, Middlesex, of an ancient Kentish family. He was destined for a commercial life, and was at different times engaged in business as well as in the law. He made his reputation as an Oriental and archæological scholar by the publication of a number of papers on these subjects. In 1840 he accompanied an expedition to Abyssinia and made important discoveries regarding the structure of that portion of Africa, besides collecting vocabularies of its languages and dialects. His theories on the sources of the Nile, at first published in an essay, The Nile and its Tributaries, which in 1860 was amplified into a book, were in great part proved by the discoveries of explorers. In 1864 he made a second journey to Abyssinia, and the year before his death he made an expedition to Arabia for the purpose of discovering the true site of Mt. Sinai. The following list of his works includes the only one mentioned ante, vol. i.: 1. Origines Biblicæ; or, Researches in Primeval History, Lon., 1834, 8vo. 2. "It was claimed for him that by this work he had paved the way for others to arrive at a final settlement of the whole of the important questions connected with the exodus of the Israelites. Bell, Marion, (Shaw,) Lady, wife of Sir Charles Bell, (ante, vol. i.,) to whom she was married in 1811. She survived her husband more than thirty years. (Ed.) Letters of Sir Charles Bell, K.H., F.R.S.L., and E. Selected from his Correspondence with his Brother, George Joseph Bell, Lon., 1870.

"The recently published correspondence of our great anatomist sets before us, indeed, not so much the philosopher as the man. . . . These letters, addressed chiefly to his brother George, were, it is obvious, placed at the disposal of the anonymous friend to whose biographical notice in the seventy-second number of the Quarterly Review we owe what little has reached the public ear of the details of Sir Charles Bell's private life. . . . A short paper of recollections, simple, yet full of the expression of feeling, written by his widow, makes up the rest of the volume."—Sat. Rev., xxix. 381.

The "anonymous friend" referred to in the above notice was apparently the Rev. Whitwell Elwin; but his connection with the volume seems to have been limited to the preface, which he wrote at the request of the publisher, Mr. Murray, in consequence of Lady Bell's having expressed her inability for the task. Bell, Thomas, F.R.S., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1792–1880, b. at Poole, Dorsetshire, Eng.; studied in the London hospitals; became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1815 and a Fellow in 1844, and acquired a large practice as a dentist. In 1836 he was appointed professor of zoology at King's College, London. He was one of the secretaries of the Royal Society, president of the Ray Society from its foundation in 1843 till 1859, and of the Linnæan Society in 1853–61. On retiring from practice at seventy he settled at the Wakes, Selborne, which had formerly belonged to Gilbert White, from whose heirs he purchased it. Besides the works mentioned ante, vol. i., he published: 1. Catalogue of Crustacea in the British Museum, Part I., 1855. 2. New Tracks in North America: a Journal of Travel and Adventure, Lon., 1869, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Dr. Bell is an English gentleman who accompanied an expedition sent out in 1867 to survey the most southern of the routes proposed for a new Pacific Railway. . . . The solid part of his book consists chiefly of information as to the various railroad lines across the continent. . . . He does not profess to be a skilful writer. . . . There is, however, enough adventure in the book to be interesting, even when simply told."—Sat. Rev., xxviii. 456.

"Of its true merits—interest and information—the latter must be considered as predominant. . . . The author seems to have been . . . as indefatigable in the collection of his facts, at whatever risk and trouble to himself, as simple and concise in his statement."—Nation, xi. 371.

"A book in which the author sets forth his views of the next, now swiftly approaching, 'stage in the industrial and social development of humanity.' In order to give his sketch verisimilitude, and to present his matter in a manner every way appropriate to it, Mr. Bellamy causes his hero to go to sleep at the hands of a mesmerist, in an underground vault, and to wake, undecayed and in the perfect vigor of youth, after the lapse of a century, to find a new heaven and a new earth; and, greatest miracle of all, a new and better Boston."—Atlantic Monthly, lxv. 249.

"It is well constructed and well written, and captivates the reader's imagination. . . . As for Mr. Bellamy's dream, it will, I fear, remain always a Utopia, unless man's heart be entirely transformed. His ideal is a pure communism, and, as such, raises invincible objections."—Émile de Laveleye: Contemp. Rev., Jan., 1890.

5. The Races of Afghanistan: being a Brief Account of the Principal Natives inhabiting that Country, Calcutta and Lon., 1880, 8vo.

"Dr. Bellew's avowed primary object is to show what races compose that people whom, in a vague and loose way, we have been accustomed to call Afghans; whence and why they migrated; how some of them were originally Buddhists, or possibly portions of the lost Tribes of Israel; what changes they have undergone in physiognomy, language, and domestic habits, and what contributions they have made to Oriental history. . . . Dr. Bellew brings to this task some qualifications not easily surpassed. . . . The result of his speculations and researches is embodied in a clear and not unattractive style."—Sat. Rev., l. 270.

Bellew, John Chippendale Montesquieu, 1823–1874, b. at Lancaster, Eng., was the son of an army officer, Captain Robert Higgin, but on coming of age assumed his mother's maiden name, that of a noble Irish family from which she was descended. He studied at St. Mary's Hall, Oxford; was ordained in the English Church in 1848, and, after holding several minor positions, including a chaplaincy in Calcutta, became incumbent of Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury, London, in 1855, and for twelve years or more enjoyed great popularity as a preacher, owing to his natural oratorical gifts and his highly-trained and effective elocution. In 1868 he became a convert to Catholicism, and adopted the career of a public reader, in which he was eminently successful, attracting large audiences in the principal towns of England, and making two professional visits to America. 1. Benn, Alfred William. The Greek Philosophers, Lon., 1883, 2 vols. 8vo.

"A remarkable production. It is subtle, learned, and eloquent. He brings to the illustration of his proper subject information gathered from the most varied sources, and has been able, in quite a felicitous way, to show the frequent parallelism between Greek and modern thought."—Spectator, lvi. 485.

Benn, George, 1801–1882, b. at Tanderagee, County Armagh, Ireland; educated at the Belfast Academical Institution, where, in 1819, he gained a prize offered for the "best account of a parish," by an essay on the parish of Belfast, which was published anonymously in an enlarged form as: 1. The History of the Town of Belfast, with an Accurate Account of its Former and Present State: to which are added a Statistical Survey of the Parish of Belfast and a Description of some Remarkable Antiquities in the Neighbourhood, 1823, 8vo.

"For so young a writer it was a work of uncommon judgment and research, exceedingly well written, with an eye for scenery and a taste for economics as well as for antiquities. It is not superseded by Benn's later and larger labours."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., iii. 227.

He received his medical education in Paris, but practised in London from 1843 to 1869, when he fell into a consumption, obliging him to retire and seek a milder climate. His restoration to health while residing on the Western Riviera led him to establish himself at Mentone, which he did much to make famous as a resort for invalids, and where he continued to spend the winters, enjoying an extensive practice, while spending the summer at his country residence in Surrey, Eng., and occasionally visiting London as a consulting physician. Bennett, John Hughes, M.D., LL.D., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1812–1875, b. in London; studied medicine at Edinburgh; graduated M.D. in 1837, receiving a gold medal for the best surgical report, and afterwards continued his studies on the Continent during four years, returning afterwards to Edinburgh, where he obtained great distinction as a lecturer, and in 1848 was elected professor at the Institute of Medicine, but was an unsuccessful candidate for the chair of general pathology (1842) and for that of the practice of physic (1855) at the University, owing to the antagonism excited by his sharp criticisms of the prevailing methods of medical practice. It was by the reforms which he introduced, especially in the treatment of pulmonary diseases, that his fame was chiefly acquired. If not the first to introduce the use of cod-liver oil, his strenuous advocacy of it and his denunciations of the practice of blood-letting in affections of the lungs and other diseases seem to have had the chief share in revolutionizing the existing system. According to the Lancet, i. 534, "he reduced the mortality of uncomplicated pneumonia to nil; he demonstrated not only the dispensableness, but the injuriousness, of the antiphlogistic treatment which had ruled the best minds of the civilized world for ages." His contributions to medical literature were very numerous. He was for many years editor and proprietor of the London and Edinburgh Monthly Journal of Medical Science, and his papers and memoirs in the British Medical Journal numbered upwards of a hundred. I. Benthall, John. Songs of the Hebrew Poets in English Verse: David. Lon., 1878, p. 8vo.

Bentham, George, C.M.G., F.L.S., 1800–1884, son of Sir Samuel Bentham, a naval architect and engineer, and nephew of Jeremy Bentham, accompanied his father to Russia in 1805–7, and to France, where the family resided in 1814–27. He studied law, but gave up practice to edit his father's voluminous writings on the navy and dock-yards, and to assist his uncle in his researches. In 1827 he produced Outlines of a New System of Logic, largely in the form of a criticism of Whately's Logic. Its publishers having become bankrupt immediately after its appearance, the book was lost to sight, and it was not till 1850 that it was discovered to contain the doctrine of the quantification of the predicate, previously ascribed to Sir William Hamilton. (See the article by G. T. Bettany in Dict. of Nat. Biog., iii. 263–267.) But it is by his researches in botany, to which he devoted himself for fifty years, that Bentham is best known. His most conspicuous achievement is his share, the larger portion, in the Genera Plantarum, which occupied the last twenty-five years of his life. He was president of the Linnæan Society for thirteen years from 1861, and contributed numerous papers to its journals and to other botanical publications. 1. Hand-Book of the British Flora, Lon., 1858; 2d ed., enl., 1863–65, 2 vols. 2. Flora Hongkongensis: a Description of the Flowering Plants and Ferns of the Island of Hongkong, Lon., 1861, p. 8vo. 3. Flora Australiensis: a Description of the Plants of the Australian Territory, 1863–78, 7 vols. 8vo.

"The working-up of the vast and peculiar flora of Australia at such a distance from the localities would have been much more difficult but for the abundant and capable aid afforded by Baron F. von Müller from Melbourne, and the specimens which he transmitted. Nevertheless, the work was enormous to undertake single-handed."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., iii. 266.

"The Genera Plantarum gives a revised definition of every genus of flowering plants, a view of its extent, geographical distribution, and synonymy, with references and notes. . . . Nothing has been neglected which could add to the value of the work. The authors have personally examined specimens, living and dead, of the whole series of flowering plants wherever practicable, their extent of knowledge and command of materials far exceeding anything previously attained. Such a work marks of necessity an epoch in botany."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., iii. 266.

"Whatever is certainly known, or conjectured with probability, will be found in these handsome volumes, together with a coloured drawing of the plant, and generally also details of the part which yields the economic product. Of the mode in which the work has been done nothing but good can be said. . . . The two authors have arranged between them a plan of distribution of labour by which Professor Bentley takes the pharmaceutical and Dr. Trimen the more purely botanical portion of the work. The unrivalled stores of knowledge possessed by the former of these gentlemen in his own department, and the unusual advantages of the latter in ready access to the rich collections at the British Museum, were thus utilized, and the result is the production of a work which will long retain its place as a standard book of reference replete with the most trustworthy information on the subject of which it treats."—ALFRED W. Bergenroth, Gustav Adolph, 1813–1869, b. at Oletzko, East Prussia; emigrated to California in 1850, and after a year of "roughing it" returned to Europe, and in 1857 settled in London with a view of studying the Tudor period of English history. Finding the documents there insufficient, he went to Simancas, Spain, and studied the subject in the archives of that town, showing remarkable talent as a decipherer. He was consequently engaged to collect and edit a series of documents for the Record Commission. For biog., see CARTWRIGHT, W. C., infra. (Ed.) Calendar of Letters, Despatches, and State Papers, relating to the Negotiations between England and Spain, preserved in the Archives of Simancas and elsewhere. Vol. I., Henry VII., 1485–1509. 1862.—Vol. II., Henry VIII., 1509–1525. 1868.—Vol. III., Supplement to Vols. I. and II., 1868, 8vo. (The views of Bergenroth in regard to the character of Queen Isabella of Spain and of her daughter, Queen Katharine of England, and as to the mental capacity of Queen Juana of Castile, have been shown to he utterly untenable.)

"The conclusions are in general so strained, and the arguments often so puerile, that the only doubt we can feel is whether to ascribe them to a want of critical power or to a strong bias perverting its exercise. In either case the defect is remarkable in a mind which was otherwise admirably fitted for the work of historical investigation."—Note to Prescott's History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, rev. ed., Phila., 1873, iii. 209.

Besant, Mrs. Annie, (Wood,) b. 1847, in London; married in 1867 to the Rev. Frank Besant, then a master at Cheltenham College, afterwards rector of Sibsey, Lincolnshire. She began her literary career by writing a work called Lives of the Black-Letter Saints, which was never published, and some stories for the Family Herald. Becoming a freethinker, she wrote at the instance of Mr. Thomas Scott, the free-thought advocate, a pamphlet called The Deity of Jesus of Nazareth, by the Wife of a Beneficed Clergyman, which led to a separation from her husband. She then joined the National Secular Society, and became a contributor and subsequently co-editor of a journal published by Mr. Bradlaugh. She has also lectured in public on political, social, and scientific topics. In 1880 she matriculated at the London University, and passed the preliminary scientific examination with honors in 1882. She is the editor of Our Corner, a monthly magazine. 1. (Ed.) The Free-Thinker's Text-Books, by C. Bradlaugh, Lon., 1876, 8vo. 2. Besant, Walter, b. 1838, at Portsmouth, Eng.; was educated at King's College, London, and at Christ's College, Cambridge, graduating with high mathematical honors. He was intended for the church, but abandoned this career, and was appointed senior professor in the Royal College of Mauritius. Being obliged by ill health to resign this position, he returned to England and devoted himself to literature, and acted for many years as secretary to the Palestine Exploration Fund. He has contributed largely to magazines, including Once a Week, of which James Rice was for some time the editor and proprietor. In 1871 the two authors began a literary partnership which continued till the death of Rice in 1882. They wrote in collaboration many novels, beginning with Ready-Money Mortiboy, which they dramatized and brought out on the London stage, and another play, Such a Good Man, from which their story bearing the same title was taken. Since the death of Mr. Rice, Mr. Besant has published a number of novels dealing partly with social problems, which have made their mark in a practical as well as a literary way, All Sorts and Conditions of Men having led to the establishment of the People's Palace in London, while Children of Gibeon has awakened more recently a strong sympathy with the seamstresses and other workwomen of London. It is, however, in his novels dealing with past periods of English history, the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, that the fine quality of Mr. Besant's workmanship is, in the opinion of critics, best displayed, Dorothy Forster, in particular, being esteemed by many the best historical novel that has been published since Esmond. 1. Studies in Early French Poetry, Lon., 1868, p. 8vo. 2. When George the Third was King, Lon., 1872, 2 vols. p. 8vo. 3. The French Humourists, from the Twelfth to the Nineteenth Century, Lon., 1873, 8vo.

"The author traces the stream of humour in France from its earliest attainable source down almost to the point it has now reached, dwelling on the most famous authors, omitting only, for reasons stated in the preface, besides the writers of the fifteenth century, the names of Clément Marot and Voltaire. . . . He has made a witty and interesting book out of an excellent subject."—Sat. Rev., xxxvi. 607.

"The author gives us nineteen chapters, beginning with a light glance on the light subject of the Chanson, and ending with Béranger. . . . Here is a history of France told in a way not usually followed by historians, and it is well told by Mr. Besant. He has studied his subject, and he has proved himself to be qualified to give it clear expression."—Ath., No. 2403.

"His volume is the best introduction to Rabelais that has yet appeared in England, supplying a complete vindication of the teaching and a fairly accurate and life-like portraiture of the author."—Ath., No. 2701.

7. The Revolt of Man, Edin., 1882, p. 8vo. Anon. New ed., with author's name, 1882.

"He takes us into an impossible state of society, and then commits the fatal error of trying to explain how this impossible state came to exist. . . . Mr. Besant's story lacks imaginative consistency."—Spectator, lv. 1383.

"It projects the reader at once a hundred years ahead of the present generation, into a state of things in which woman is supreme, and the subjection of man is discussed in the daring themes of female philosophers and revolutionary girl graduates. . . . It is a happy idea well worked out, and must rank amongst the best literary confections of its kind."—Ath., No. 2844.

8. All Sorts and Conditions of Men: an Impossible Story, Lon., 1882, 3 vols. p. 8vo; new ed., 1884.

"Whether 'All Sorts and Conditions of Men' be a possible or an impossible story, there cannot be any doubt that it is altogether refreshing and delightful."—Acad., xxii. 255.

The Life and Achievements of Edward Henry Palmer, late Lord Almoner's Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, and Fellow of St. John's College, Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

"Mr. Besant has succeeded in his difficult task to admiration. His book is well worthy the memory of his dead friend; and to say this is to give it high praise indeed. It is also, even for those who did not know Palmer, full of the most varied interest and entertainment."—Sat. Rev., lv. 700.

"It is an interesting book all through, in parts even a brilliant book, but it is not a good biography. Of all that Professor Edward Henry Palmer, Orientalist, author, and explorer, did, of all that he learned, of all that he wrote, and of most things that he appeared to his contemporaries to be, we have the fullest account in the pleasantest words; but of what he was, absolutely nothing."—Spectator, lvi. 773.

"Mr. Besant's ability has never before been shown so conspicuously. He has made his heroine tell the story of Lord Derwentwater and the Northumbrian rising in 1715, and every word of it may be read with unflagging interest, in spite of the extraordinary amount of family history and local detail worked into it. . . . The great difficulty of the historical novel—the weaving of the love-story into the web of facts so as to make the whole seem natural and consistent—is overcome with surprising success."—Ath., No. 2955.

15. Uncle Jack, &c., Lon., 1885, p. 8vo. 16. Children of Gibeon: a Novel, Lon., 1886, 3 vols. cr. 8vo.

"Every reader of 'Children of Gibeon' will admit that the difficult task of making a novel out of what might have been a tract has been performed with excellent skill. One gets genuine pleasure out of Mr. Besant's genial humour, his quick sympathy with human nature, his raillery, and his good-tempered sarcasm, all the more crushing because he is never angry; and the cleverness of the main contrivance of his story, obvious to the inquiring critic, has that spontaneous charm which is the mark of originality."—Ath., No. 3082.

Lon., 1888, 3 vols. cr. 8vo.

"A strong point of distinction between Mr. Besant and other writers who have given us historical novels of late years is, that he works from the inside of his subject. While he is at work he is of the time; he cuts himself adrift from the after-experience of the events he is narrating, he is never betrayed into a whisper of nineteenth-century knowledge, he never slips into a nineteenth-century mode of thought or aspiration, whether he be dealing with the higher or the lower order among those whom he is portraying. It is this Defoe-like directness and detachment which make his historical novels so stirring and fascinating."—Spectator, lxii. 373.

"Mr. Besant does not belong to any school or class of novelists; he is unique. . . . No one else sees such people as he shows us, as he sees them; no one else sets fancy to do such feats, so quaint and daring, so original, and yet so heart-homely, so wild and common-sensical. In the latter respect he is especially remarkable. The creations of his fancy whom he intends to be romantic, out of bounds, wholly unusual, exceptional among their fellows, are, indeed, all these; but, their bent given, their course indicated, they follow the one and persevere in the other with entire simplicity and reasonableness."—Spectator, lx. 114.

In the appendix an excellent summary is added of the main points in the annals or the topography of the city."—Sat. Rev., xxxiii. 216.

Besides many contributions to the journals and proceedings of scientific societies of which he is a member, he has published: 1. Travels in the East Indian Archipelago. Maps and Illust. Lon., 1868, 8vo; N. York, 1869, 8vo.

"We owe the present work to an expedition which had for its object to restore the scattered and impaired collection of shells from the East, made in the last half of the seventeenth century by the German naturalist, Rumpf or Rumphius, a description of which was published after his death, in 1705; and to procure a duplicate collection for American museums. . . . Our author not only reports to us all that he saw, but shows his acquaintance with the works of previous explorers and travellers in the same field, so that altogether he offers a very considerable amount of information, which will be fresh to most readers."—Nation, viii. 298.

Now first edited from Original Manuscript and from his Printed Correspondence and other Writings. Phila., 1874, 3 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., rev., 1888.

"I have aimed to condense Franklin's own memorials of his entire life, hitherto scattered through many bulky volumes, and yet more bulky manuscript collections, into a single compact work, and to give them the convenient order and attractiveness of a continuous narrative. To this end I have taken from his writings and correspondence whatever was autobiographical and presented it in a strictly chronological order. I have not attempted to give all his letters, nor more of any letter or other document than furthered the central and controlling purpose of the work,—to tell the Franklin story fully, and without tediousness or vain repetitions."—Extract from Preface.

"The three bulky volumes under our notice do not consist of either a biography or an autobiography of Benjamin Franklin: or rather the latter is contained, together with notes and extracts, in less than three hundred pages, out of some seventeen hundred to which Mr. Bigelow's work is spun out, while his remaining fourteen hundred pages are filled up with letters, extracts, notes, and scraps, and supplemented from every source that ever suggested itself to the mind of a bookmaker."—Spectator, liii. 246.

(Relates to the efforts of the agents of the Confederate States to have a navy built in France, the countenance given to them by Napoleon III., and the measures by which they were defeated.)

"The story has up to this time remained buried in the captured Confederate archives. . . . Mr. Bigelow himself played no insignificant part in the story, seeing that he was the chief instrument in bringing the intrigue to nought. . . . In form his book is primarily a documentary study, three-fourths of its space being taken up by official papers; but the author's narrative, drawn largely from his personal experience, and enlivened with much caustic observation and incisive comment, connects the documents and fills out the gaps in the story."—Nation, xlvii. 457.

Birks, Thomas Rawson, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1810–1883, b. at Staveley, in Derbyshire, the son of a tenant farmer of the Duke of Devonshire. He was educated first at a dissenting college and afterwards at Cambridge, where he won a scholarship at Trinity and gained high honors. On leaving the university he joined the Church of England, took orders, and became curate to the Rev. Edward Bickersteth, whose daughter he afterwards married. In 1866 he accepted the charge of Trinity Church, Cambridge, and in 1872, on the death of F. D. Maurice, he was elected his successor as Knightsbridge professor of moral philosophy at Cambridge, an appointment which led to much discussion. He was an active controversialist. His Supernatural Revelation was an answer to the anonymous work on Supernatural Religion, and his Modern Physical Fatalism was an examination of the doctrines of Herbert Spencer, and was followed by a controversy with that author. The following list of his publications includes the only one mentioned by its title ante, vol. i.: 1. "Every one who loves scenery and the more detailed beauties of nature, and especially those who do not shrink from the awe-inspiring marvels of natural phenomena on a grand scale, should read this remarkably fascinating and beautifully written book, by a brave and cultivated lady who has seen all that she describes."—Spectator, xlviii. 565.

"Bent upon seeing, doing, enjoying, and describing everything, and devoid of crotchet or bias, Miss Bird is a model tourist. While exuberant of epithet, as befits a tropical theme, she tempers her enthusiasm with judgment, and reproduces what she sees with fidelity. We do not know of any other book which so completely familiarizes the reader with the aspects of nature and life in the Hawaiian Archipelago."—Ath., No. 2474.

5. A Lady's Life in the Rocky Mountains, Lon., 1879, p. 8vo; 4th ed., 1881.

"This little volume is so brimful of incident and adventure that, dip into it where we may, we can hardly go far wrong. . . . Where chapter after chapter is almost equally exciting, it is difficult to do justice to the variety of the episodes."—Sat. Rev., xlviii. 604.

"She would have made a better book had she told us less about the sunsets and more about the people that she saw. But her notes on manners are frank and interesting as far as they go, and they have a reflected interest in the fact that they depict precisely the same character in which Mrs. Trollope found so much to censure."—Nation, xxx. 15.

"Spontaneous and unadorned as is the narrative, it is more interesting than most of the novels which it has been our lot to encounter, and, in fact, comprises character, situations, and dramatic effect enough to make ninety-nine novels out of a hundred look pallid and flat in comparison. And yet we feel, beyond misgiving, that naught is exaggerated here, nor aught set down in malice. It is a plain record of facts, made on the spot by a genuine and unconscious artist."—Spectator, lii. 1414.

6. Unbeaten Tracks in Japan: an Account of Travels in the Interior, including Visits to the Aborigines of Yezo and the Shrines of Nikkô and Isé, Lon., 1880, 2 vols. p. 8vo; 4th ed., 1881; new ed., 1885.

"A record of new and varied experiences told in singularly pure and bright English."—Sat. Rev., l. 549 and 619.

"Unbeaten Tracks in Japan is interesting throughout, and is especially valuable as giving the opinions of one who is neither an enthusiast, nor interested in puffing Japan, on the actual state of the country and the people."—Ath., No. 2765.

"Readers of these volumes, if they should have entertained an idea of visiting Japan, will probably relinquish their purpose by the time they have made themselves acquainted with what Miss Bird has to say. Not that the picture which she draws is in all respects an unpleasant one,—it is anything but that,—but simply because a perusal of her book is very nearly the same thing, in effect, as a visit to the places which she describes would be."—Spectator, liii. 1448.

"She is an excellent observer, and her wide and accurate knowledge of botany and natural history, as well as of people, gives her an unusual sweep of view and freshness of style. . . . The evidences of culture are seen on every page of her narrative, and her accuracy has the quality of a sweet perfume. . . . Nevertheless the book leaves on the mind an impression of unfairness and one-sidedness. To record in full the defects of a nation in its transition stage from orientalism to modern civilization without the relief afforded by the background of antique virtues . . . seems as much opposed to the canons of truth as of art."—Nation, xxxi. 466.

7. The Golden Chersonese, and the Way Thither: with Maps and Illustrations, Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

"There can be no better proof of the author's power and skill than the variety she imparts to her pictures of tropical scenery, which, with all its charms, yet in many essential features has a certain monotony."—Ath., No. 2898.

"Let the people in Japanese ports dub her previous work 'bird-tracks' if they will, we hail with delight her new footprints in the Malay Peninsula. . . . The same wealth of style, of fascinating narrative and dramatic grouping of effects, and, above all, the imperial quality of knowing what to leave out, make her last book peer to any of its predecessors, and, for popular use, the best work in English on the Malay Peninsula."—Nation, xxxvi. 516.

"Miss Bird is an ideal traveller. She can see, and she can use the words that place what she sees before the reader. She has regard to the essentials of a scene or episode, and describes them with a simplicity that is as effective as it is artless. Humour is here, of a quality precisely suited to a traveller; never obtrusive, but never deficient when the time comes,—oiling the wheels of action just in time to counteract friction. Better still, perhaps, she possesses individuality, insomuch that, although she vouchsafes us no self-drawn portrait, nor any approach to one, we insensibly derive an idea of her appearance and traits from the impress which these make upon the circumstances of her position. . . . Her attitude throughout is as easy as that of a person who is unaware that his photograph is being taken. . . . Not the least noteworthy among Miss Bird's gifts is a heaven-sent faculty for having adventures. . . . Things turn out as if by special inspiration. She trusts to fortune, to what ought to happen, and it does happen. . . . Her whole experience is a singular combination of the natural and the dramatic."—Spectator, lii. 1414.

The following list of his publications includes the only one mentioned ante, vol. i.: 1. A Practical Treatise on the Law of Estates for Life, Lon., 1842, 8vo. 2. Practical Treatise on the Law of Partnership, including the Law relative to Joint-Stock Companies, Lon., 1847, 8vo; Amer. ed., with Notes of American Cases, Phila., 8vo. 3. On the Strength of Nations, Lon., 1859, 8vo. 4. Omitted Chapters of the History of England, from the Death of Charles I. to the Battle of Dunbar, Lon., 1864, 8vo.

"We have never had the luck to meet with a general history of England from which the Commonwealth—or, as Mr. Bisset prefers to call it, 'The Interregnum'—was omitted. . . . That Mr. Bisset has, by his researches in the State Paper Office, been enabled to throw some new light on the interval between the death of Charles I. and the restoration of Charles II. we have no scruple in admitting. The light, indeed, is not very considerable in amount."—Sat. Rev., xvii. 630.

5. History of the Commonwealth of England: vol. ii., 1867, 8vo. (This is a continuation of No. 4.) 6. Essays on Historical Truth, Lon., 1871, 8vo.

"The incidents which Mr. Bisset has examined in detail in the present volume are those which relate to the deaths of Lord Gowrie and Alexander Ruthven, of Prince Henry, the eldest son of James I., of Sir Thomas Overbury and Lord Salisbury, and finally of Lord Essex, who on the eve of the trial of William Russell died, or was murdered, in the Tower. . . . We will content ourselves with expressing our gratitude to Mr. Bisset for the masterly and thorough analysis which entitles him to a high place in the ranks of judicial historians."—Sat. Rev., xxxiii. 276.

7. The History of the Struggle for Parliamentary Government in England, Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Mr. Bisset is no novice in historical research and composition; no mere reproducer of other men's notions, or digester of other men's compilations; his knowledge of the historical literature falling within the range of his subject, or capable of illustrating it by comparison and analogy, is both extensive and accurate; and he writes, if he will allow us to borrow an expression from a poet of whom he very unnecessarily falls foul, 'all like a man.' . . . It is the more to be regretted that he fails to add to these important requisites in a writer of national history the highest of all. . . . His book is only another proof that knowledge does not always cast out prejudice; that no case is too good to admit of being marred by intemperate advocacy; and that the difficulty of assuming more points of view than one in treating of a complicated historical growth is to some minds insuperable."—Sat. Rev., xliii. 710.

8. A Short History of the English Parliament, Lon., 1882–83, 2 vols. cr. 8vo.

"He has contrived to write a hundred and eighty-nine pages of a book called A Short History of the English Parliament, and in the course of them to say nothing about his subject. Something there is about the Parliament, such as reflections on the excellence of such an institution, but of its history there is nothing."—Sat. Rev., liii. 572.

Black, William, b. 1841, at Glasgow, Scotland, and educated at private schools. He studied art for a time, but while still in his teens became a journalist on the staff of the Glasgow Weekly Citizen. In 1864 he went to London and began to write for periodicals. In 1865 he was attached to the staff of the London Morning Star, and during the Prusso-Austrian war of 1866 he was special correspondent for that paper. He was assistant editor for four or five years of the London Daily News. 1. James Merle: an Autobiography, Lon., 1864, 12mo. 2. Love or Marriage? Lon., 1868, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 3. In Silk Attire, Lon., 1869, 3 vols. p. 8vo; 3d ed., 1872.

"Mr. Black has made a great advance as a writer of fiction since he last appeared before the public. He has learnt to share the sympathy which he can call out in his readers, and there is no trace throughout 'In Silk Attire' of the cold and almost cynical exhibition of the broken idol which made the story of 'Love or Marriage?' painful in direct proportion to the power and skill which it evinced."—*Sat. "The weak point of Mr. Black's otherwise excellent novel is the want of ingenuity in the plot."—Ath., No. 2262.

7. A Daughter of Heth: a Novel, Lon., 1871, 3 vols. p. 8vo; 17th ed., 1880. The first edition was published anonymously.

"If humour, sweetness, and pathos, and a story told with simplicity and vigour, ought to insure success, 'A Daughter of Heth' is of the kind to deserve it. . . . Save one or two inartistic weaknesses which seem to betray the unaccustomed hand, it is good all through, which few modern novels are."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 812.

"'A Daughter of Heth,' though a somewhat slight story, is so good that one thinks it might have been a good deal better. There is plenty of pathos, humour, and power of description. But while we are constantly being amused and interested, we feel throughout a want of completeness and substance in the tale which interferes with our enjoyment. . . . Coquette herself is too slight a figure to sustain the leading part. . . . In the descriptions of Highland coast scenery we recognize a sympathetic pen, but they have been too much repeated to maintain their force. Indeed, fully one-third of the scene-painting, good as it is, might have been omitted to the improvement of the book."—Ath., No. 2276.

"The special genius of the book is the conception of such a character as Coquette's,—without any conscious principle, without a religion, scarcely even moral, in a conventional sense, yet exquisitely good, with a purity and self-forgetfulness that are angelic."—Spectator, xliv. 741.

8. The Strange Adventures of a Phaeton, Lon., 1872, 2 vols. p. 8vo; new ed., 1874.

"Mr. Black has ventured upon throwing aside all the ordinary methods of appealing to his reader's interest. There is no story, or next to no story, and no really pathetic or startling situation. The sentiment never rises beyond the pitch which is common in cultivated society when a quiet flirtation is taking place. The love-making is graceful, but not impassioned. . . . Imagine a man of taste and poetical sentiment talking in a circle of refined and intelligent people, and you will have a pretty fair notion of the general tone of Mr. Black's book."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 739.

"Mr. Black brings out, in a series of happy touches, the striking features of each successive landscape, from the wooded crags of Cliefden to the still waters of Rydal; . . . and each bit of scenery is rendered more attractive by being associated with the figure of a lovely girl, whom Mr. Black has skilfully placed in the foreground. . . . Looking at the part she fills, we may partly reverse the title of 'Vanity Fair,' and say that Mr. Black has given us not 'a novel without a hero,' but a heroine without a novel."—Ath., No. 2349.

9. A Princess of Thule, Lon., 1873, 3 vols. p. 8vo; new ed., 1874.

"Contains much that is, besides much that might be, first-rate; enough, indeed, to warrant the assertion that Mr. Black has it in his own hands to make his mark among writers who will be remembered."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii. 22.

"The excellent descriptions of natural beauty, the thorough mastery of local peculiarities, the truth and accuracy with which the local dialect and modes of thought are reproduced in his present volumes, are subsidiary, though necessary, to the due presentment of the central girlish figure which constitutes the main motive of the book."—Ath., No. 2406.

"In this book . . . there are lively incident, true insight into character, a soft pleasant humour, and over all the rare charm of a style clear, strong, and sunny as a mountain stream."—Sat. Rev., xxxix. 699.

12. Madcap Violet, 1876, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"In his latest, which is also to our thinking thus far his best, novel, Mr. Black has made a bold experiment, the audacity of which is justified by its success. He has introduced in the very midst of the ordinary occurrences of life in the present day an event which would be startling enough in a romance which dealt with a remote period. . . . It reveals a decided gain on the author's part in power and in artistic perception."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 631.

17. White Wings: a Yachting Romance, Lon, 1880, 3 vols. p. 8vo; new ed., 1881.

"Many of its pages are charming as a record of yachting experience, and many others are attractive in that they contain some very pleasant and kindly observations of character; but the attempt to string the whole together by means of the not very brilliant love-story . . . cannot be regarded as altogether fortunate."—Sat. Rev., l. 374.

18. Sunrise: a Story of these Times, Lon., 1880, 3 vols. p. 8vo; new ed., 1 vol.

"Mr. Black appears to believe, or rather perhaps he appears to wish his readers to believe, that the riddling of Europe with secret societies suggested by an even more distinguished novelist is an accomplished fact. . . . A story which is told with Mr. Black's well-known grace of style, and is illustrated by many pleasant episodes, but which has a radical defect."—Sat. Rev., li. 310.

Judith Shakespeare: a Romance, Lon., 1884, 3 vols. p. 8vo; 1885, 1 vol.

"A striking instance of the limitations of Mr. William Black's art. It is an episode rather than a story, a domestic idyl full of refinement, grace, and tenderness, drawn out with much prolix paraphrase and dull description. As a romance it is not less a signal failure than it is as an attempt to vitalize a romantic age. The author's lack of imagination and his defective dramatic faculty are painfully felt."—*Sat. 28. In Far Lochaber, Lon., 1888, 3 vols. cr. 8vo.

"Those who love the Highlands and the Highland people will read Mr. Black's new book with interest born of their appreciation of the delicate touches of description, alike of scenery and persons, which make the author so popular as a delineator of Highland character. Yet as a story for the general public nothing thinner, as regards plot and incident, has ever been set forth."—Ath., No. 3185.

Black, William George. 1. Folk-Medicine: a Chapter in the History of Culture, (Folk-Lore Soc. Pub.,) Lon., 1883, 8vo.

Blackie, John Stuart, LL.D., b. 1809, at Glasgow; was educated at the universities of Aberdeen and Edinburgh, and afterwards spent a couple of years abroad studying German, Italian, and classical philology at Göttingen, Berlin, and Rome. In 1834 he was called to the Scottish bar, and began to contribute articles on German literature to Blackwood's and the Foreign Quarterly Review. In 1841 he was appointed professor of Latin literature in Marischal College, Aberdeen, and in 1852 was called to the chair of Greek at the University of Edinburgh, a position which he resigned in 1882. Professor Blackie has delivered many public lectures in England and Scotland and contributed a large amount of prose and verse to periodicals. He is a stanch upholder of Scottish nationality. The establishment of a chair of Celtic in the University of Edinburgh was mainly owing to his efforts. He is also a warm believer in the study of modern Greek in connection with the classical language. 1. (Trans.) Blackley, Rev. William Lewery, M.A., b. 1830, at Dundalk, Ireland; educated partly on the Continent and partly at Trinity College, Dublin; ordained in 1854; was for a short time curate of a church in London, and for thirteen years curate of Frensham; in 1867 became rector of North Waltham, Hants, and in 1883 was made vicar of Kings Somborne, Hants, and honorary canon of Winchester. Canon Blackley has contributed largely to the leading English reviews. An article which he published in the Nineteenth Century for November, 1875, entitled National Insurance, a Cheap, Practical, and Popular Way of Preventing Pauperism, attracted much attention, and led to the formation of a league for the purpose of upholding the proposal contained in it. 1. Blaine, James Gillespie, b. 1830, at West Brownsville, Washington Co., Pa.; educated at Washington College, Pennsylvania; was for a time professor of mathematics in a military institute in Kentucky, and was afterwards a teacher in the Pennsylvania Institute for the Blind at Philadelphia. In 1854 he removed to Augusta, Me., where he became the editor of a newspaper and an active politician. He was one of the organizers of the Republican party in Maine; served in the State legislature from 1858 to 1862; was elected representative to Congress in 1862 and re-elected for each term till 1876, and during part of that time was speaker of the House of Representatives. He was a candidate for the Republican nomination for President in 1876 and in 1880. In 1884 he was nominated, but was defeated by the Democratic candidate. He was secretary of state in 1881, and was appointed to the same post in 1888. 1. Eulogy on James Abram Garfield, (pub. by U.S. Gov't,) Wash., 1881, 8vo; republished, Bost., 1882, 16mo. 2. A Memoir of Charles James Blomfield, D.D., Bishop of London: with Selections from his Correspondence, Lon., 1863, 8vo.

"A book that bears on its title-page the startling announcement that a Fellow of All Souls', a ripe scholar, and the son of a bishop, has undertaken the charge of a district perhaps the most miserable, and beyond doubt the most neglected hitherto, of the region of East London, prepares us for the equally paradoxical fact that a son has for once written a really good life of his father. . . . The life is a thoroughly honest and faithful one, and very amusing in spite of the reticences which his relationship must often have imposed upon him."—Sat. Rev., xv. 733, 797.

"The sonnets of a man of genius, though a man of genius whose egotisms and self-will have lent a boastful element to his poetry, and disturbed to a considerable extent the serenity, and narrowed, perhaps, more than it has widened, the scope, even, of his observation and experience."—Spectator, liv. 770.

3. The Future of Islam, Lon., 1882.

"Where most people see nothing but a series of dangers and difficulties, he paints a rosy picture of happiness and progress. . . . Mr. Blunt has put forward a very pretty hypothesis and adduced other hypotheses in its support; but he has not brought reasonable evidence to his aid, and there is hardly anything in his book that is not guess-work."—Ath., No. 2847.

"Mr. Wilfrid Blunt is possessed by a dream of a great future for the religion of Mohammed, and he urges his views and his reasons with an enthusiasm which excites at once our admiration and our amusement."—Sat. Rev., liii. 700.

4. The Wind and the Whirlwind, Lon., 1884. (Political poems referring to Egyptian affairs.)

"Unmistakably the work of a poet. . . . Its lyrical lilt is not to be questioned. It carries you along with it. So much for 'The Wind and the Whirlwind' as a poem. As a political manifesto it is indeed all wind and whirlwind."—Acad., xxvi. 41.

(Consists of a collection of articles and addresses.)

"Dr. Blyden has given us a very interesting and remarkable volume. . . . Two facts are more particularly brought into relief by him: first of all, that Islam is carrying on a vast and civilizing propaganda in Nigritia; and, secondly, that if Central Africa is to be colonized it must be with civilized Negroes. . . . The portion of Dr. Blyden's volume which deals with the relations of Islam to the Negro is that which will prove of most interest to readers who do not belong to the Negro race."—A. H. Booth, James, C.B., 1796–1880, b. at Toxteth Lodge, near Liverpool; educated at Cambridge, and called to the bar in 1824. He was a member of the royal commission for inquiring into the municipal corporations of England and Wales in 1833, and held other offices, including that of secretary to the board of trade. His writings were principally contributions to various law magazines, but he also published a work entitled The Problem of the World and the Church reconsidered, in Three Letters to a Friend. By A Septuagenarian. Lon., 1871. A second edition was published in 1873, and the third, with an introduction by the author, in 1878.

Booth, Rev. James, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., 1806–1878, b. at Lava, Leitrim Co., Ireland; graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1829; was principal of Bristol College from 1840 to 1843, when he was appointed aid-principal of the Liverpool Collegiate Institution, and held this position till 1848, when he removed to London. He had been ordained in 1842; in 1854 he was appointed minister of St. Anne's, Wandsworth, and in 1859 vicar of Stone, near Aylesbury. He was also chaplain to the Marquis of Lansdowne, and from 1846 to 1849 was president of the Liverpool Literary and Philosophical Society. His publications consist chiefly of pamphlets and of contributions to the proceedings of learned societies. Most of his mathematical papers were collected and republished, with additions, under the title of A Treatise on some New Geometrical Methods, Lon., 1873–77, 2 vols. Among his other writings are: 1. How to Learn and What to Learn: Two Lectures advocating the System of Examinations established by the Society of Arts, 1856. 2. Systematic Instruction and Periodical Examination, Lon., 1857, 8vo. 3. Boott, Francis, M.D., F.L.S., 1792–1863, b. in Boston, Mass., was the son of Kirk Boott, an Englishman living in the United States; graduated at Harvard, and afterwards studied medicine under Dr. John Armstrong in London and at the University of Edinburgh, and then established himself in London, being especially successful in his treatment of fever cases, in which he adopted the novel method, strongly opposed by the profession at large, of allowing the patient abundance of fresh air. Having acquired a competency, he withdrew from practice and devoted himself to botanical researches, especially in connection with the genus Corex. He was secretary of the Linnæan Society from 1832 to 1839, and its treasurer from 1856 to 1861. Besides contributing a monograph on his special subject to Sir W. J. Hooker's Flora Boreali-Americana, he published: 1. Memorials of the Life and Medical Opinions of John Armstrong, M.D.; to which is added an Enquiry into the Facts connected with those Forms of Fever attributed to Malaria or Marsh Effluvium, 1833–34, 2 vols. Borrow, George, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1803–1881, b. at East Dereham, Norfolk, Eng.; accompanied his father, who was a recruiting officer, to various quarters, and at seventeen was articled to a solicitor at Norwich. He spent much of his time in studying languages, for which he had a great gift, acquiring among other tongues that of the gypsies. Later he went to London, where he had a hard struggle with poverty, wrote for the booksellers, and among other tasks assisted in compiling the Newgate Calendar. He then became an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in which capacity he travelled through France, Germany, Russia, and the East, learning the language of each country with marvellous rapidity. He made two visits to Spain as agent of the society, and was twice imprisoned there for circulating the Scriptures. In 1840 he married the widow of a naval officer and settled on an estate on Oulton Broad, Norfolk, where the remainder of his life was mainly spent, and where he lived on familiar terms with the gypsies, allowing them to camp freely on his grounds. He was noted for his eccentricities, his passion for athletic exercises, his scorn of the gentilities of life, and his vigorous advocacy of the religious doctrines of the Church of England. The following list of his publications includes the works mentioned ante, vol. i., the Autobiography there spoken of being apparently Lavengro: 1. (Trans.) Faustus: his Life, Death; from the German of F. M. von Klinger. By G. B. 1825, 8vo. 2. (Trans.) Romantic Ballads, (from the Danish of A. G. "It is not often that a book succeeds so soon after its appearance in calling into existence a second book specially devoted to expounding and criticising its ideas. . . . In spite of features which provoke a smile in the irreverent, and difficulties which may frighten away the timorous, Mr. Bosanquet's volume is an excellent piece of reading." —James Sully: Acad., xxviii. 61.

"Very much the most important philosophical work that has been published in the English language since Lewes's 'Problems of Life and Mind.' . . . It has a wider scope than Prof. Green's works ever had, and it differs from Jevons's work by being both metaphysic and literature, as well as a treatise on the science of logic. . . . His book is at bottom an attempt to exhibit all knowing as the gradual development of an Absolute Thought. . . . It is possible, of course, to misapprehend the meaning of a book which in difficulty is to the harder portions of Kant's 'Kritik' as those parts are to the evening newspaper, and which is not made easier either by the fluency and perspicuity which its style appears to possess, or by any clear and explicit statement of its metaphysical presuppositions."—James Saumarez Mann: Acad., xxxiv. 259.

Botfield, Beriah, 1807–1863, descended from the ancient family of Boseville, or Botevyle, b. at Earl's Ditton, Shropshire, and educated at Harrow and Oxford. He was a member of Parliament from 1840 to 1847, and from 1857 until his death. He was a botanist, a geologist, but above all a bibliographer, and was well known as a member of a great number of literary and scientific societies. Some of his writings were privately printed at his country-seat, Norton Hall, Northamptonshire. He edited for the Surtees Society the Catalogues of the Library of Durham Cathedral, (1840;) for the Roxburghe Club, Manners and Household Expenses of England in the Thirteenth and Fifteenth Centuries, (1841;) for the Maitland Club, John Row's History of the Kirk of Scotland, 1558–1637, (1842;) for the Abbotsford Club, Buke of Order of Knyghthood, translated from the French of Sir Gilbert Hay, (1847;) and for the Bannatyne Club, Original Letters on Ecclesiastical Affairs of Scotland, chiefly written by or addressed to James VI., 1603–25, (1851.) He contributed archæological and bibliographical papers to the Gentleman's Magazine, the Philobiblon Miscellany, and Archæologia. Among the writings issued from his private printing-press were: Journal of a Tour through the Highlands of Scotland, 1830; Stemmata Botevilliana, 1843, afterwards enlarged and published as an account of the family of Boseville or Botfield, 1858; and Bibliotheca Hearneiana,—excerpts from the Catalogue of the Library of Thomas Hearne, 1848, afterwards reprinted in the Reliquiæ Hearneianæ, (ed. 1869.) Botfield's address at Shrewsbury as president of the British Archæological Association (1860) was published, with many plates, under the title of Shropshire, its History and Antiquities, Lon., 1860, 4to. His best-known work is Notes on the Cathedral Libraries of England, 1849.

Lon., 1876, 8vo; 2d ed., same year.

"Regarding the book . . . as making no claim to a serious study of the sources of contemporary German life, but as affording the reader a lively description of the results of immediate personal observation, . . . it is not without a certain kind of merit. The author has for the most part succeeded in giving her readers a lively and agreeable representation of that which has fallen under her own observation."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 298.

"He is able to state most justly in his preface that more than half of the contents of this work is derived from hitherto unused manuscripts, and that by them, apart from their independent worth, altogether new light is thrown on most of the information that is not actually new."—Acad., ix. 500.

9. English Newspapers: Chapters in the History of Journalism, Lon., 1887, 2 vols. 8vo.

"It has been his aim rather to give a selection from the ample materials which lie ready at his hand than to stupefy the reader with a mass of dry facts which he could not satisfactorily digest. He has endeavoured to show the bearing of journalism upon the politics and literature of our nation, and to illustrate the manner in which the conduct of English newspapers has influenced for good or for evil the course of English social life. . . . Whether fulness of description, accuracy of detail, or interest of narrative are [sic] regarded, his predecessors must all yield the palm to the narrative of the latest historian of our national press."—W. "While Dr. Newman supplied the intellectual backbone of Tractarianism, Faber popularized it, so far as in those days it would condescend to become popular. . . . It was of course inevitable that Faber's biographer should be a member of his adopted Church, and it was perhaps natural that he should treat his hero's conversion as the grand event of his life, which all that came before was gradually leading up to. . . . There is too much attempt to turn the life into a hagiology."—Sat. Rev., xxviii. 325.

"Mr. Boyd has stories to tell at first-hand of Sir Walter Scott, Lord Clyde, Bishop Wilberforce, Lord Mayo, and others, but he has seemingly always kept his ears open, à la Boswell, to the utterances and recollections of others, and hence amidst his 'gleanings' we have anecdotes of Prince Metternich and Napoleon I., of Sir Charles Napier, of President Lincoln, and others, which are only one remove from first-hand."—Acad., viii. 623.

Bradlaugh, Charles, M.P., 1833–1891, b. in London; became a lecturer and writer in advocacy of Secularism and the advanced Radical cause, and in 1860 founded the National Reformer, which was prosecuted by the government in 1868–69, the trial resulting in the repeal of almost the last statutes that controlled the full liberty of the press in England. He was elected to Parliament from Northampton in 1880, and re-elected several times, but having refused to take the Parliamentary oath, and not being allowed to sit on affirmation, he was excluded from his seat till 1885, when the objection was withdrawn. He published numerous pamphlets, including the following: 1. A Review of the Work of the Rev. E. Mellor, M.A., entitled "The Atonement, its Relation to Pardon." A Lecture, delivered in the Odd-Fellows' Hall, Halifax, Nov. 22, 1859. Printed for the Halifax Secular Society. Lon., n. d., 8vo. 2. Is there a God? By "Iconoclast." Lon., n. d., 8vo. Anon. 3. Bradley, Rev. Charles, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1789–1871, b. at Halstead, Essex; was a member for a time of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, but was ordained at the age of 23, without taking a degree; vicar of Glasbury, Brecknockshire, from 1825 till his death, and from 1829 perpetual curate of St. James's Chapel, Clapham. He belonged to the Evangelical school, and was highly esteemed as a preacher. Besides the volumes of sermons mentioned ante, vol. i., which went through several editions, he published: 1. Sermons on the Christian Life, 1853. The other volumes mentioned below have been published since his death: 2. Sermons preached at High Wycombe, Glasbury, and Clapham, Lon., 1884, p. 8vo. 3. Bradley, Very Rev. George Granville, D.D., son of Rev. Charles Bradley, supra, b. 1821, and educated at Rugby, under Dr. Arnold, and at University College, Oxford, where he was a favorite pupil of Dean Stanley, then tutor at that college. He was for some time assistant master at Rugby, and in 1858 was ordained, and appointed head-master of Marlborough College. In 1870 he was elected to the mastership of University College, Oxford; he was select preacher at Oxford 1874-75, and held the post of honorary chaplain to the Queen 1874-75, and of chaplain-in-ordinary 1876-81. On the death of Dean Stanley in 1881 he was appointed to the deanery of Westminster. 1. Sermon, All Saints' Day, 1865, Lon., 1865, 8vo. 2. Sermon: the Parting at Miletus, Lon., 1866, 8vo. 3. Recollections of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, late Dean of Westminster: Three Lectures, delivered in Edinburgh in November, 1882, Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

"Dean Bradley's 'Recollections' are recollections only, and contain no criticism. We may add that the only criticism which is in any way appropriate to the book is this,—that Stanley's ardour for breadth and comprehensiveness, tending as it did to rest on a purely historic basis, and to justify almost every development which could naturally link itself with the past, necessarily became less an ardour for truth than an ardour for charity, and that in his hands the Christian religion became almost purely a religion of love, while its intellectual outlines on every side seemed to fade away. That is the defect, so far as there is a defect, in Stanley's mind, a defect visible throughout. He helps you to understand everything which needs chiefly new local and historic colour for its interpretation, but does not help you to see what there is which is permanent beneath the constant fluctuations and changes of local and historic colour; so that his writings tend rather to produce on the mind the false impression that truth itself changes from age to age, just as the human capacity to understand it certainly does change."—Spectator, lvi. 257.

"There are some books which can only be read with concentration; but this book, though it will reward a concentrated study, may also be dipped into standing by the fire. . . . Of the exposition I will only say that it is sympathetic and admirably expressed, and that it is based, happily, not on the Authorized, but on the Revised Version. The critical and historical aspects of the book are, no doubt, kept in the background; and even the ordinary reader will have to supplement this delightful book by other guidance."—T. K. Braid, James, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1795–1860, b. in Fifeshire, and educated at the University of Edinburgh; practised as a surgeon in Scotland and afterwards in Manchester. In 1841 he turned his attention to the subject of animal magnetism, and proved by experiment that the state to which he gave the name of neuro-hypnotism was a subjective one, not depending on the magnetic influence of the operator, but that it could be self-induced by fixed gaze on any inanimate object and concentration of the mental attention. His suggestions have been acted upon in France and Germany, and a German translation, by W. Preyer, of nearly all his writings was issued under the title of Der Hypnotismus: ausgewählte Schriften von J. Braid. The following list of his publications includes the one mentioned ante, vol. i.: 1. Satanic Agency and Mesmerism reviewed, in a Letter to the Rev. H. McNeile, A.M., in Reply to a Sermon preached by him, 1842, 12mo. 2. Neurypnology; or, The Rationale of Nervous Sleep, considered in Relation to Animal Magnetism. Brassey, Anne, Lady, 1837?–1887, daughter of the late J. Allnutt, of London; was married in 1860 to Thomas (now Lord) Brassey, infra. She accompanied her husband in his long yachting tours, and wrote narratives of her travels, originally in the form of journals or letters to her friends, which were subsequently published in book form. Lady Brassey was a dame of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in England, and was invested by the King of the Sandwich Islands with the Order of Kapiolani in recognition of her description of his kingdom, and of the hospitality extended to him at Normanhurst Castle, the country home of Lord Brassey, in July, 1881. In addition to her published works she wrote and printed for private circulation The Flight of the Meteor, an account of two cruises to the Mediterranean, and A Voyage in the Eothen, describing her trip to Canada and the United States in 1872. She died on the "Sunbeam" of a fever contracted while travelling in Spain. 1. A Voyage in the "Sunbeam," our Home on the Ocean for Twelve Months. Illust. Lon., 1878, 8vo; 4th ed. same year; abridged ed., 1881, fp. 8vo.

"Mrs. Brassey is probably the first lady who ever made her home on the waters, in the literal sense of the term, and sailed round the world with her family. . . . Her cruise was a very spirited undertaking, and the narrative of her 'voyage and travel' is admirably lucid and natural."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 435.

"The great master of adjectives and writer of pictures of travel—Théophile Gautier—was not more successful in his elaborate manner than is Mrs. Brassey in a way which never dazzles nor fatigues."—Sat. Rev., xlviii. 761.

"We entertain the most charitable feelings towards Mrs. Brassey, as towards all who have unintentionally injured us. . . . The fact that the book exists is, however, a noteworthy phenomenon."—Spectator, liii. 19.

"Whatever can be done by unstinted means, taste, and intelligence to make a book acceptable to the public has been done in this instance, but it is only the more evident that something else is required to give rank and stamp to such a publication. . . . The trip which it took five hundred pages to describe was really one across the Atlantic and back again. . . . Though the style carries the reader along as pleasantly as the 'Sunbeam' carried its crew and passengers, the request for a kindly spirit and for leniency on the part of the critic made in the preface was not altogether superfluous."—Sat. Rev., lix. 319.

Brassey, Sir Thomas, first Baron Brassey, K.C.B., D.C.L., son of Thomas Brassey, the well-known contractor for public works, b. 1836, at Stafford, Eng., and educated at Rugby, and at University College, Oxford. He was elected M.P. for Devonport in 1865; was member for Hastings from 1868 to 1886; was appointed civil lord of the admiralty in 1880, and secretary to the admiralty in 1884; raised to the peerage in 1886. He has been a member of many Parliamentary commissions, particularly those relating to naval affairs, and has on several occasions acted as arbitrator in disputes between employers and workmen. 1. "Mr. Brassey has furnished all persons who take part in the controversies connected with capital and labour with a storehouse of most valuable facts. His own observations and his father's experience have given him great opportunities for collecting evidence on the subject. . . . The most interesting chapters perhaps are those which deal with the questions whether increased wages and shorter hours do or do not imply greater cost of production, whether wages have risen more rapidly in England than in other countries, and whether the commercial progress of other countries has of late been greater than that of our own."—*Sat. Edward Atkyns Bray, infra. Besides the numerous works mentioned ante, vol. i., she wrote: 1. The Good Saint Louis and his Times, Lon., 1869, cr. 8vo. 2. The Revolt of the Protestants in the Cévennes, Lon., 1870, p. 8vo.

"Mrs. Bray has taken a curious and interesting subject, and has made a very readable book of it: but though she is alive to its more obvious and superficial aspects, aspects remarkable enough in their way, she seems to us to fail in comprehending its full character. . . . More about the life, words, thoughts, and ways of the Camisard insurgents, and less about the romance of raids and skirmishes, would have made the book more really valuable."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 20.

Bray, Charles, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1811–1884, b. at Coventry, the son of a manufacturer of that place, to whose business he succeeded in 1835, retiring from it in 1856. He was associated with a number of institutions and benevolent schemes in Coventry; founded a co-operative society there, and was proprietor of a local newspaper, in which he gave expression to his very positive and peculiar views. He and his wife and his sister-in-law were intimate friends of Mary Ann Evans, ("George Eliot,") who was for a time a member of Bray's household. Besides the books mentioned ante, vol. i., he published: 1. On Force: its Mental and Moral Correlates, Lon., 1866, 8vo. 2. Brewer, Rev. John Sherren, [see Brewer, J. S., ante, vol. i., add.,] 1810–1879, b. at Norwich, Eng., and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, took orders in 1837, and was appointed chaplain to the workhouse of the united parishes of St.-Giles-in-the-Field and St. George, Bloomsbury. He became lecturer in classical literature at King's College, London, in 1839, and after the removal of F. D. Maurice, in 1855, succeeded him as professor of the English language and literature and lecturer in modern history. He was also Maurice's successor as principal of the Workingmen's College. In 1877 he was appointed to the crown living of Toppesfield, in Essex, and he then gave up his professorship and devoted himself zealously to parochial work. His literary activity was at first that of a journalist, and he was for several years editor of the London Standard; but in 1856 he was commissioned to collect and edit the state papers of the reign of Henry VIII. for the Rolls series, and in this and similar tasks he found congenial employment during the rest of his life, his ample knowledge of the history of the Tudor period being combined with a special aptitude for minute research. His works include editions of Bishop Goodman's History of his Own Times, (1839,) Field's Book of the Church, vol. i., (1841,) Thorndike's Discourse of the Right of the Church in a Christian State, (1841,) and Fuller's Church History, (1845,) all of which are mentioned under the names of the respective authors in vols. i. and iii. "He is a good and sound scholar, and thoroughly understands his work. The only fault we should find with him is that he a little overdoes it in his introductions. . . . Giraldus Cambrensis, alias Gerald Barry, is one of the most amusing writers of any age. If he is to be reckoned among mediæval historians, he is, beyond all doubt, the most amusing of mediæval historians."—Sat. Rev., xi. 342.

"The mode of treatment is such as to give old subjects an entirely novel character. Untold mysteries are revealed,—not startling nor paradoxical mysteries, for Prof. Brewer is a destroyer of paradoxes rather than a maker of them,—but unknown or else neglected facts are brought into the full daylight, and give harmony and consistency to what we know already."—Ath., No. 2796.

11. The Reign of Henry VIII., from his Accession to the Death of Wolsey: reviewed and illustrated from Original Documents. Edited by James Gairdner. Lon., 1884, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Consists of the four different treatises which were originally published as prefaces to the four volumes of 'Letters and Papers of the Reign of Henry VIII.' . . . They do not profess to be a complete history of the period which they cover; . . . but there can be 'but one opinion,' as Mr. Gairdner says, 'not only of the high value of these prefaces to the historical student, but also of their very great interest as literary compositions.' . . . The author was no mere learned Dryasdust, but with all his respect for facts and love of historical truth combined a bright and sympathetic imagination, which enabled him to present us with a vivid and interesting, as well as a trustworthy, picture of the times."—*Sat. "If diligence of research could have insured the final history of American Presbyterianism, it would now be in our possession. But very rarely is the passion for minute investigation united with the art of skilful literary presentation. Certainly it is not so united here. A history which, rightly handled, would have had an epical nobility, has been so written that it is a collection of the driest facts, obscuring by their multitude the general impression."—Nation, xli. 57.

"Dr. Bright's work has no rival among school-books so far as post-Revolutionary history is concerned. . . . Those who have studied the earlier portions of the work will be prepared to find this volume remarkable, like its predecessors, for accuracy, clearness, and impartiality."—Ath., No. 3183.

"He crowns the history of England with the age of conversion and compassion, of increased susceptibility in the national conscience, of a deepened sense of right and wrong, of much that, in the eye of rivalry, is sentiment, emotion, idealism, and imbecility. . . . He is the historian of living forces and present cares. His intense consciousness of duty and difficulty in the discharge of such a trust makes his book vivid and impressive beyond his former volumes, although it lacks the dramatic element."—Lord Acton: Historical Rev., No. 12.

Bright, Right Hon. Bright, Richard, M.D., F.R.S., [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1789–1858, b. at Bristol, Eng.; studied medicine at Edinburgh and in London, graduating at Edinburgh in 1812; afterwards studied at Berlin and Vienna; was assistant physician to the London Fever Hospital 1816–1818, but again went abroad, returning in 1820 and becoming assistant physician and, in 1824, full physician to Guy's Hospital, while holding also several positions in the Royal College of Physicians. His success in his profession, especially as a consulting physician, exceeded that of any of his contemporaries, while his fame has been perpetuated by his discovery of the nature and origin of a disease of the kidneys which is likely to bear his name as long as it continues to afflict humanity. His minor researches were not less remarkable as proofs of his singularly keen and accurate observation. Most of his writings were published in Guy's Hospital Reports, the London Medical Gazette, and the Medico-Chirurgical Transactions. His works published separately, the first being the only one mentioned ante, vol. i., are: 1. Travels from Vienna through Lower Hungary: with some Remarks on the State of Vienna during the Congress in 1814, Edin., 1818, 4to. 2. Reports of Medical Cases: vol. i., 1827. Brooke, Rev. Stopford Augustus, b. 1832, at Letterkenny, Co. Donegal, Ireland; educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated M.A. in 1858; curate of St. Matthew, Marylebone, London, 1857–59, and of Kensington 1860–63; minister of St. James's Chapel 1866–75, and of Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury, London, since 1876. He was appointed a chaplain-in-ordinary to the queen in 1872. In 1880 he seceded from the Church of England, and connected himself with the Unitarians. 1. "Theology . . . is not, we think, an accurate phrase as applied here by Mr. Brooke. . . . However, it is not worth while to quarrel with a term under cover of which Mr. Brooke has given to a Sunday afternoon audience so much thoughtful criticism, so many fine suggestions, such varied and copious knowledge."—Spectator, xlvii. 1502.

"Such a thing can hardly be said to have existed before this, at least in a separate form, and Mr. Stopford Brooke has supplied the want in a wonderfully small compass,—although we must remark that the compass allotted to him is rather too scant for even the most condensed treatment of his subject,—and on the whole with wonderful success." —*Sat. Brooks, Charles William Shirley, [ante, vol. i., add.,] 1816–1874. Brooks's first magazine articles were signed Charles W. Brooks. He then adopted the signature Charles Shirley Brooks, and finally became known altogether as Shirley Brooks. His connection with Punch, by which he is best known, began in 1851 and continued unbroken to the time of his death. His articles were signed "Epicurus Rotundus." In 1870 he succeeded Mark Lemon as editor. His latest articles for Punch, Election Epigrams and The Situation, were written on his death-bed. Besides the books mentioned ante, vol. i., he published: 1. The Gordian Knot: a Story of Good and Evil. Illust. Lon., 1858, 16mo; new ed., 1868. 2. The Silver Cord, Lon., 1861, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"There is as much cleverness, as much contrivance of incident, as lively a conception of what the characters selected might be supposed to say, in the 'Silver Cord' as in the 'Woman in White.' But the latter was a much more successful book than the former can be, because the plot was most carefully contrived, and the details fitted in with the most scrupulous nicety. The utmost success attainable in this line of art is not of a very high kind."—Sat. Rev., xii. 302.

"Whoever wishes to know what was the prevailing opinion among good, average, respectable Britons with regard to the Crimean War, the Indian Mutiny, . . . Bishop Colenso, Governor Eyre, has only to refer to this selection. . . . We doubt if Punch will ever quite recover the loss of Mr. Shirley Brooks. Skill at catching the momentary fancy of the less thinking part of the community, and fluency of language for expressing it, . . . were possessed by him in a remarkable degree."—Ath., No. 2490.

"He has brought to bear upon a wide field of human experience a sagacious and penetrating mind, and his sermons are therefore always highly suggestive and interesting. On almost every page one finds remarks which are evidently the result of original thought, hints which surprise one by their ingenuity and novelty. Though the language is hardly eloquent in the highest sense of the word, yet, considering that these were, we believe, extempore sermons, it maintains a high level of beauty and lucidity, and occasionally rises into grandeur. . . . But we have some criticisms to make. Mr. Brooks seems to us, in the first place, to be more acute than profound, more ingenious than penetrating. His thought is not always quite clear, and it is never deep. . . . Mr. Brooks's whole treatment of religion is too fanciful and casual; he does not, in these sermons at least, show that he is penetrated by the truths with which he deals and the principles by which he explains them. Each sermon gives one the impression that the preacher has had to look for his subject—it has not found him; and when he has got it, instead of going at once to the deep underlying religious meaning of it, he has let his fancy, and his wit, and his sagacity play round it; and he thus gives us much that is valuable, much that is wise, much that is ingenious and thoughtful, but he does not strengthen the foundations of religious thought or add to the great principles by which men's moral lives are guided."—Spectator, lvii. 1319.

Broome, Mary Ann, Lady, b. in Jamaica, where her father, Hon. W. J. Stewart, was island secretary; educated in England, returned to Jamaica in 1850, and in 1852 was married to Captain G. R. Barker, R.A., who afterwards served in the Crimean war and the Indian Mutiny and was made K.C.B. He died in 1860, and in 1864 Lady Barker was married to Mr.—afterwards Sir—Frederick Napier Broome, supra, then of Canterbury, New Zealand. After her return to England in 1869 she entered on a successful literary career, writing works descriptive of life in the colonies and books for young people, which have been very popular. She was superintendent of the Kensington School of Cookery 1874–75, and has since then resided with her husband in the colonies where he has held appointments. 1. Station Life in New Zealand, Lon., 1869, p. 8vo; new eds., 1871, 1874, 1878, 1883.

"If grown-up people can be tempted, as doubtless they can, to run off to the colonies in the way that school-boys are tempted by stirring narratives of adventure to run off to sea, this must be a very dangerous book. Lady Barker, indeed, gives some express cautions on the subject, but the whole tone of her book is very exhilarating. . . . We may express our implicit confidence in Lady Barker's descriptions, which are tinged with something of couleur de rose, but not with more than comes from health and high spirits. . . . We find this book full of a singular interest and charm."—Spectator, xliii. 591.

Brougham, Henry Peter, Baron Brougham and Vaux, [ante, vol. i., add.,] d. 1868, aged 89. Lord Brougham was a voluminous writer, and the list of his works given ante, vol. i., includes the collected edition in 10 vols. issued in 1857, to which an 11th vol. was added in 1861, containing at the end a bibliography by Mr. Ralph Thomas. A new edition appeared in 1872–73, and the Bibliographical List was published separately, 1873, 12mo. The novel entitled Albert Lunel; or, The Château of Languedoc, published anonymously, Lon., 1844, 3 vols. p. 8vo, and suppressed after a few copies had been distributed, was privately acknowledged by Brougham, and was republished in 1872. His daughter, Eleanor Louise, who died in 1839, is the heroine of the book, he himself figures as "the Baron," and several other real persons are introduced under fictitious names. The following extract from a review sufficiently indicates its character:

"Some interest attaches to the recital of the adventures of the nominal hero, and there are one or two scenes in his life which surprise us in their unwonted feeling. But the bulk of the book oscillates between didactic discourse and personal caricature."—Spectator, xlv. 1335.

Another work, first published anonymously, History of England and France under the House of Lancaster, Lon., 1852, 8vo, was reissued, with the author's name, in 1861. Several pamphlets of a much earlier date—1830–35—were published either anonymously or under the pseudonyme of "Isaac Tomkins, Gent." The only remaining work requiring to be mentioned here was a posthumous one: Life and Times of Henry, Lord Brougham. Written by Himself. Lon., 1871, 3 vols. 8vo.

"The most interesting parts of Brougham's fragmentary autobiography are his descriptions of the characters of some of the eminent men with whom he was associated." —Sat. Rev., xxxii. 812.

The time mentioned would, of course, have been utterly insufficient for the purpose had not the explorers, who were sent out by the Amazon Steam Navigation Company, been furnished by the latter with every means for facilitating their progress. . . . In this expedition Mr. Barrington Brown acted as chief and geologist, while Mr. Lidstone fulfilled the duties of civil engineer and draughtsman, and their object is stated to have been to select and report upon certain territories allotted to the company by the government of Brazil. . . . "The story of the life of Dr. Duncan was singularly worth telling, and Dr. Brown has told it well. No doubt Dr. Brown's style of writing, like that of many Scotchmen, is bright, fervid, and spasmodic. . . . Nevertheless, here we have the veritable John Duncan, from childhood to old age."—Spectator, xlv. 1301.

Brown, John, M.D., F.R.S.E., 1810–1882, son of John Brown, D.D., supra, and great-grandson of John Brown of Haddington, [ante, vol. i.,] b. at Biggar, in Lanarkshire; educated at first privately and afterwards at the high school and the University of Edinburgh; graduated as doctor of medicine in 1833, and from that year resided and practised his profession in that city. He was a devoted and enlightened physician, but his name is familiar to general readers as that of the author of Rab and his Friends, a sketch of animal character which attained a wide popularity both in Great Britain and America. His literary and social qualities brought him into intimacy with many celebrities, including Jeffrey, Thackeray, and Ruskin. 1. Horæ Subsecivæ: Locke and Sydenham, with other Occasional Papers, Edin., 1858; 5th ed., 1885.

"It is observable that the whole of the first volume of 'Horæ Subsecivæ'—perhaps, though not the most popular, yet the most substantially valuable of the whole series—is almost exclusively devoted to subjects intimately bearing on the practice of medicine."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., vii. 20.

"It is not often that a second series of anything is successful; and Dr. Brown's second series of his 'Horæ Sub-secivæ' is so little an exception to the rule, that the volume would not call for any notice were it not that it happens to contain, among other miscellaneous essays, a sketch of the life and character of the author's father."—Sat. Rev., xi. 588.

"One very obvious characteristic of these papers is their appearance of ease and spontaneity."—Acad., xxi. 169.

"The author of 'Rab and his Friends' has a place apart among contemporary essayists. His manner and his matter are alike peculiar to himself. They remind one very charmingly of other times and other ways than our own, and yet of our own as well. They are modern, and yet they are of the old school. They stand midway between the intense and very careful present and a vigorous and somewhat reckless past, and they are touched with some of the characteristics of both."—Ath., No. 2840.

"We do not shrink from saying that Mr. Brown is the first who has given the world a complete biography of the man. . . . If it adds little to our knowledge of Bunyan himself, it enables us to realize more thoroughly than before the village where he was born; the town where, either as prisoner or free man, he spent the greater part of his life; the congregation of which he was first member and then minister,—an office in which Mr. Brown succeeds him; the people who were his neighbours and associates; the troubled times, full of the throes of intestine strife, civil and religious, in which he lived."—Sat. Rev., lxii. 63.

"He has produced the most elaborate and exhaustive account of Bunyan hitherto published, and has, indeed, left no room for a successor. . . . One point Mr. Brown makes, and pretty clearly, that has escaped former biographers,—namely, that Bunyan did not write his principal allegory during his twelve years' imprisonment, but during a later and comparatively short imprisonment of six months."—Spectator, lix. 49.

Brown, Oliver Maddox-, 1855–1874, b. at Finchley, Eng., son of Ford Maddox-Brown, a distinguished painter, gave promise during his brief life of remarkable excellence both as an artist and an author. Several of his water-colors, painted at the age of fourteen to seventeen, were exhibited in public galleries in London, and some poems written at the same period have been considered still more striking evidence of a precocious genius. His only publication during his lifetime was a story written when he was sixteen, which was included with other productions in a volume published after his death. For biog., see Ingram, J. "Mr. Brown's spelling is like that of Leconte de Lisle, concerning which Théophile Gautier politely remarked that it would be simpler to write in Greek at once. As to Mr. Brown's examination of the character and legend of Circe, we are constrained to say that, with all his industry, he is following a false trail and mythologizing on a mistaken method. Mr. Brown reasons on what he calls 'the natural phenomena theory.' In his opinion (if we do not misunderstand him) the incidents in the Odyssey are mostly veiled statements about processes among the larger atmospheric phenomena, day, night, moonshine, and so forth, and it is his object to interpret the original meaning of the narrative. . . . The 'apparent inconsistencies' in the character of Circe are 'explained fully by the natural phenomena theory and by that alone.' To our minds the 'apparent inconsistencies' are more readily explained by the theory that 'souvent femme varie,' and that there is a great deal of the woman left in the goddess."—*Sat. "It is a good deal to say of a county history that it can be read through with pleasure; yet this can certainly be said of Mr. Craig-Brown's pages, which are never deficient in interest. . . . In fact, his literary skill is somewhat an impediment to his reader's appreciation of his erudition. This does not imply that the erudition is not there, but it is not the erudition of an antiquary or an archæologist. In fact, Mr. Craig-Brown is neither of these, but is rather a social historian. It is the life, the manners and customs—above all, the literature and the character—of the dwellers in Ettrick Forest which attract him."—M. CREIGHTON: Historical Rev., No. 12.

"He has written with all his soul and with all his strength. . . . A consequence of this sincerity is that his verse should gain him friends and admirers wherever it is read, and that he should be as well known among strangers as among his own people. . . . It must be noted, however, that the author's romance is never so striking in conception or so successful in execution as his fun, his wit, his tenderness, his pictures of life and character, or his dramatic analysis of emotion."—Ath., No. 2793.
